England Will Meet Ulster's Defiance Unwaveringly, Says Lloyd George

HUDDERSFIELD, England, March 21.—"The government is determined to meet defiance of popular liberties resolutely and unwaveringly, whatever the hazard may be."

This striking statement was made by Chancellor Lloyd George in a speech here today. The speech is believed to have been inspired and to represent the attitude of Premier Asquith and his Cabinet as to the threatened revolt in Ulster.

WOMAN'S SUICIDE IS FEARED

PARIS, March 21.—Premier Ernest Monis and former Minister of Finance Joseph Caillaux today heard themselves denounced as plotters against justice. This accusation, made at the parliamentary inquiry into the Rochette case, came from Public Prosecutor Lescouve and created a sensation.

"I am convinced," declared M. Lescouve, "and with me every judge and lawyer in Paris, that Public Prosecutor Victor Fabre was a victim of pressure from Premier Monis and Finance Minister Caillaux when he applied for a long postponement of the trial of Henri Rochette, the banker-swindler."

Maitre Labori, attorney for Mme. Henriette Caillaux, wife of Joseph Caillaux, whose assassination of Gaston Calmette, the famous journalist, resulted in political revelations which brought about the present investigation, held a conference with his client this afternoon. As he was leaving St. Lazarre prison, where Mme. Caillaux is confined, the lawyer said his client would take the stand in her own behalf.

All Paris is interested in the preparations being made for the defense of Mme. Caillaux and in the resumed probe of her husband's connection with the alleged 25,000,000 frauds of Banker Rochette.

Between the two cases it is believed that a dark secret page in the judicial history of France will be opened up.

In a cell where her loneliness is self-enforced, the woman who assassinated Calmette, it is claimed, for "the honor of her family," sat pondering upon her dead today.

FEAR SUICIDE ATTEMPT.

Her extraordinary and tragic sadness has caused her jailers to fear an attempt at suicide.

Fruits and sweetmeats have been sent her, together with many flowers. Every parcel which arrives for the woman whose act has split France into two frenzied factions has been searched for concealed weapons or poisons.

In her cell she listened without visible emotion as the bells tolled for the funeral of her victim.

She appeared unshaken by the wild cries of 10,000 persons who shouted their hate at the burial of Calmette, who was a popular idol.

The government is believed today to be straining every effort to prevent any revelation of political skeletons. Even M Labori, who so fearlessly defended Dreyfus in the face of public opinion, is said to have urged his fair client to throw herself on the mercy of the court.

It is now said that there is little likelihood of the "unwritten law" plea being made for Mme. Caillaux. If she refuses to throw herself on the mercy of the court, an insanity plea may be made.

Fearing her death upon the guillotine, her husband, a former premier of France, has urged her to leave her fate with the court, as this course could mean nothing more than a term of imprisonment.

The Jaures investigation has been resumed. Both Caillaux and Ernest Monis, another former French premier, have been grilled by the parliamentary committee as to their motives in hindering the trial of Banker Henri Rochette, who is said to have duped investors out of $3,000,000, escaping scot free.

10 Per Cent. Cash Dividend for the Siegel Creditors

A ten per cent. cash dividend to unsecured creditors of the Henry Siegel Company in Boston, payable in ten days, was today declared by Referee Olmstead in the bankruptcy court. This calls for $100,000 in cash. It was hoped to declare a twenty per cent. dividend at this time, but the trustees opposed this on the ground that large claims against the local store by the New York and Chicago stores are yet to be filed.

Second Caesarian Baby for Woman

NEW HAVEN, Ct., March 21.—For the second time in thirteen months Mrs. Alice Lostos of Buffalo, N. Y., has survived a Caesarian operation. The second operation was recently performed in this city when a baby girl was born to Mrs. Lostos. She is now recovering and the baby is reported to be doing nicely. The first operation was performed in New York thirteen months ago.

Rose Stokes to Speak at Woman's City Club

Rose Pastor Stokes, the Socialist leader, will be the speaker at a dinner Monday night at the Hotel Somerset of the membership campaign committee of the Boston Women's City Club. The membership has reached 2,115 in the campaign for 3,000 members. For the club's May meeting, Monday, May 4, there will be a "pop" concert, the club having chartered the whole of Symphony Hall for the event.

EVIDENCE MAY YET SAVE DORR

Governor Walsh's announcement in the case of William A. Dorr, sentenced to die next week for the killing of George E. Marsh of Lynn, was delayed today by the sensational appearance at the State House of Fletcher G. Plummer, an automobile dealer in Massachusetts avenue.

Plummer rented young Dorr the automobile in which the aged Lynn coal merchant was taken upon his last ride.

"Mr. Plummer tells me things," Governor Walsh said to the newspapermen, "which demand the most careful investigation. If they can be substantiated I may yet decide to submit the Dorr case to the Executive Council.

"I have asked Mr. Plummer not to tal kfor the present. I realize my great responsibility in the case of this young man sentenced to death and I shall not shrink it. If what Mr. Plummer has told me can be substantiated the death sentence may be commuted."

Plummer left the State House quietly. He was very pale. His own responsibility, he said, had been worrying him. He felt compelled to tell the Governor all he knew.

It is understood that Plummer's story has to do with the apparent condition of Dorr, twenty-eight years old, at the time he rented the Plummer automobile. On this subject, however, both Plummer and the Governor were silent.

The question was asked why, if Dorr's condition was such as to attract attention, Plummer should have rented him the machine. Governor Walsh would not discuss this question.

"All I can say," the Governor declared, finally, "is that I have been told things which demand the closest investigation."

The Governor was asked for Plummer's explanation for not coming forward until the day the Governor had fixed for his decision in the matter.

"All I know about that," Governor Walsh answered, "is that Mr. Plummer says he supposed this matter would be taken care of by counsel for Dorr."

Deserted in 15 Minutes; Divorced

PUTNAM, Ct., March 21.—Deserted within fifteen minutes after her marriage, Mrs. Eva G. Medbury, twenty-one, was granted a divorce from Daniel S. Medbury today. She testified that she was married on August 10, 1910, by the Rev. J. J. Sity of the Holy Trinity Church.

Audience Hisses Unclad Woman in Loti's 'Aphrodite'

PARIS, March 21.—At the first production of Pierre Loti's "Aphrodite," which follows the novel closely a nude woman appears on the stage in the last act. Mlle. Dorney was so graceful and acted in such good taste in this most difficult part that a burst of applause came from the audience.

Misled by this, or possibly in some confusion, she then stepped out in front of the curtain just as she was to receive the plaudits. It was a mistake. Hisses and angry murmuring greeted her. This was silenced by Mlle. Lapparcerie, who had the presence of mind to throw a veil over the young actress.

Bank Bandit Dead in Fight with Posse

SHAWNEE, Okla., March 21.—Joseph Patterson, a twenty-two-year-old bank robber, is dead today, and Chief of Police Charles Hawkes and Deputy Sheriff Frank Timmons are suffering from serious gunshot wounds today as the result of a three-hour fight between Patterson and a posse near here. Patterson was cornered in a thicket and fought grimly until a rifle bullet pierced his heart. Patterson robbed the Newella bank late yesterday.

Dr. Mary Walker Dances the Maxixe

WASHINGTON, March 21.—Dr. Mary Walker who wears pants and a silk hat and believes all women should do the same, fell victim to the Maxixe today after more than half a century of abstinence from the temptations of terpischore. Dr. Walker attended a private dansant and went through the whole menu of modern dances under the tutelage of a professional instructor.

Fish Dealers Move to New Quarters

The exodus of dealers from T wharf to the new fish pier in South Boston has begun, with several firms moving their office equipment and furniture to the new location. The real moving day will be next Thursday. By the beginning of the week after next all the dealers will be opened for business on the new pier.

CARSON, UNIONIST LEADER.

Sir Edward Carson, M. P., surrounded by an armed bodyguard, has declared he has done all he can in Parliament against Home Rule. His captains in Ulster,

BULLETINS.

LONDONDERRY, March 21.—At a conference this afternoon the Nationalist leaders finally yielded to the renewed importunities of Mr. Redmond and reluctantly decided to call off the Sunday demonstration. Five appeals from Mr. Redmond were received during the day.

LONDON, March 21.—Reports were current this evening that Premier Asquith had resigned. They could not be confirmed, but received little or no credence.

ARMAGH, Ireland, March 21.—Five tons of provisions and ammunition were today moved into an improvised blockhouse. Engineers and carpenters were all day reinforcing the walls, boring loop holes and erecting platforms upon which the riflemen will stand.

DUBLIN, March 21.—Resignations are pouring in from officers who refuse to take the field in Ulster. Ulster Unionists are telegraphing this appeal to army relatives:

"If it comes to war do not let it be brother against brother."

EDENDERRY, Ire., March 21.—Troop trains, jammed with infantry, artillery and commissary supplies, are rushing toward the Ulster border. From fifteen to thirty rounds of ammunition was given to each soldier before leaving the barracks.

DUBLIN, March 21.—Mobilization of the Irish reserve troops was begun today. This is the government's latest move in its plan to hurl an overwhelming force into Ulster counties.

LONDON, March 21.—Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, was hastily summoned to the War Office today by Secretary of War Colonel Seeley.

LONDON, March 21.—Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur Henry Fitzroy Paget, commander-in-chief of the Irish garrisons, has received specific instructions to deal as he sees fit with officers who have resigned rather than serve in the Ulster trouble.

BATTLE FLEET READY

LONDONDERRY, March 21.—Sir Edward Carson and his principal captains held a long conference of war this evening. The conference was for the purpose of taking steps to expedite the mobilization of Ulster volunteers.

LONDON, March 21.—Thirty thousand regular troops in Ireland have been put on a war footing and are ready for instant action, while thousands more are being poured into the country daily, according to authoritative statements here today. Against this force the Ulsterites can muster over 100,000 men, all claimed to be trained and disciplined, equipped and ready for action.

The bonfire is laid, and a single spark may loose the flames of civil war.

King George called into conference today Field Marshal Lord Roberts—"Bobs" of South African fame—the foremost soldier under the British flag today. The King likewise conferred with Colonel J. E. B. Seeley, Secretary of War. His Majesty was LONDON, March 21.—A Belfast despatch to the Pall Mall Gazette says that two companies of British regulars are reported to have mutinied and joined the Orangemen.

COMMITS SUICIDE AFTER BLINDING WIFE.

CHICAGO, March 21.—While riding in a crowded street car, Nathan R. Karant committed suicide today by swallowing acid after he had thrown the contents of another bottle into his wife's eyes, probably blinding her for life.

DAWSON REMOVED FROM PROGRESSIVE COMMITTEE.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., March 21.—Former Governor William O. Dawson was removed as a member of the National Progressive Committee at a meeting of the Progressive State Executive Committee here last night.

VILLA'S ARMY BEGINS ATTACK ON TORREON; 2 TOWNS CAPTURED

JUAREZ, March 21.—General Villa's attack on Torreon has begun. According to advices received by Colonel Fidel Avila, commander of the Constitutionalist garrison here, the advance of Villa's 13,000 troops is said to have started at 6 o'clock today.

The Federals retired from Bermejillo and Mapimi, the reports add, without great resistance. Both towns were occupied by the Constitutionalists.

These reports were confirmed by the following announcement from the Constitutionalist bureau of information:

"Advices from Torreon are to the effect that the Constitutionalist forces are in possession of all points abandoned by the Federals. Everything all right so far."

It is now thought that the main battle will open at Gomez Palacio, which has been strongly fortified. Villa will have difficulty in approaching that place and heavy losses there would hamper the Constitutionalists in their attack on Torreon itself, where General Velasco has 9,000 men.

Constitutionalist officers are jubilant over advices stating that General Urbina, who whipped a Federal force sent through La Cadena canyon and fought his way to a point fifteen miles east of Durango City. This information is said to have been sent to Chihuahua by wireless. If true the feat will force General Velasco to withdraw part of his army from the centre of the battle line in order to prevent a flank attack.

Report from Del Rio, Texas, say that many bullets fell on American soil during a battle between Constitutionalist and Federals last night. The small Federal garrison surrendered after a short battle.

AMERICAN MINE OWNER ROBBED OF $100,000; GUARDS SLAIN

NEW YORK, March 21.—E. R. Von Gerndorff, who in partnership with his brother owns a $100,000 mine and lead mine in Sonora, Mexico, is safe in New York today, after a perilous flight of more than eight months. To the AMERICAN he told how he had been made prisoner by bandits, escaped, hid for days in treetops and caves, was robbed of his clothing and walked for miles barefooted; was without food or water for long periods and saw his companions shot and butchered before his eyes.

"I am a native German, but an American citizen," he said. "Eight years ago I came to America to study mining engineering in Yale and Harvard. Four years ago my brother and I went into Sonora, purchased a wide track of land with 640 acres of mining machinery and began our business on a large scale. In addition to the mining operations we had 250 head of cattle and about 500 sheep. When lawlessness commenced our ranch was ruthlessly raided. Our stock was stolen despite the fact that we had fifty employes on guard night and day.

"Realizing the dangers that daily grew greater, I sent my brother and his family out of the country. My men dwindled away. They were either killed or deserted me. The latter part of July, 1913, there were only twenty of us left.

"On July 30 we left the mines with my twenty men—our party was attacked by outlaws. All but six of our party were killed. One of these was shot in the leg. I was taken a prisoner with three companions, who were summarily tried by court-martial and condemned as spies. I escaped with three companions. I became separated from them when we were attacked again by the bandits. What happened to them I cannot say.

"After a journey of two more months I arrived at Magdalena. Bandits robbed me of everything save my underwear.

"American fugitives gave me sufficient money to get by Dallas.

"The revolution and lawlessness had made a temporary pauper of me."

URGE BETTER ENGLISH FOR SCHOOL ROOM

Better English and better methods of teaching that language in colleges and high schools were advocated at the thirteenth annual meeting of the New England Association of Teachers of English, in Jacob Sleeper Hall, Boston University. Samuel Foss Holmes of the Worcester Academy said:

"English is no longer a joke, as some students think it is in the curriculum of college studies. We teachers need to know the best of other languages that we may become more proficient in teaching English and correct some of the wrong impressions of the day.

"We should have more reading in Dante, Homer, Ovid, Moliere, etc., to make us more adapted to teaching English."

Charles Swain Thomas of Newton High School in giving the report for the training of English teachers, commended Harvard University in doing systematic work in the direct training of English teachers.

Professor E. E. Charlton Black of Boston University, was elected president; G. H. Brown of Boston, vice-president; Frank W.C. Hersey of Harvard University, secretary-treasurer; Charles Swain Thomas, editor.

On the executive committee were elected Elizabeth Richardson, Boston Girls' High School; Alfred M. Hitchcock, Public High School, Hartford, Conn.; William D. Parkinson, superintendent of schools at Waltham; ClaraF. F. Palmer, Chicopee High School; Caroline M. Garish, Boston.

Notables at Funeral of Judge Clarke

The funeral of Judge Louis M. Clarke of the Suffolk Land Court was held at noon today at Old South Congregational Church. Men prominent in the State and city government and the legal profession attended the services as did delegations from each of the twenty-five clubs of the Yacht Racing Association of Massachusetts. Burial was private.

Keeps Shoes After Dowry Refusal

The romance of Frank Zoppi of Rome, N. Y., and Angelina Calozza of Utica, N. Y., who were to have married tomorrow in the church in North square, ended when Zoppi asked his $200 dowry and, when the girl was not forthcoming, demanded the return of the presents he had made Miss Calozza, including the shoes she had on. She gave back $2.50 in cash, but kept the shoes.

Asks Veto for Vacation Bill

The Finance Commission, through Chairman John R. Murphy, has sent a communication to Governor Walsh requesting that he veto the bill which provides for two weeks' vacation for all laborers "born in the employ of the city. If the Governor will not veto the bill Chairman Murphy requests he amend the bill and sign it.

SUBMIT FINAL DRAFT OF NEW HAVEN PLAN

WASHINGTON, March 21.—The final draft of the plan for the dissolution of the New Haven Railroad system, incorporating the personnel of boards of directors of the Boston & Maine Railroad and for the Rhode Island and Connecticut trolley system was announced today by Department of Justice officials.

The conference between all of these interested was scheduled for later in the day, and it was announced by Mr. Gregory that a definite statement would be made at the close of the conference. It has not been determined whether the names of the trustees for the Connecticut and Rhode Island trolleys would be announced then. It is understood that the Department of Justice is waiting for favorable reply from a prominent New Haven, Ct., man, who has been asked to accept membership on the board of the companies.

Perkins Mum on N. Y. Police Job

NEW YORK, March 21.—Colonel Goethals, having sailed for Panama without conferring with Mayor Mitchel, George W. Perkins may be police commissioner. Perkins conferred with the Mayor for over an hour and when asked today if he would accept the place answered: "I do not want to answer that question one way or the other."

Somerville Police Recover Washing

Mrs. Mary Donlan of No. 23 Linden street, Somerville, found a large washing which disappeared from her backyard two weeks ago, hanging in the yard of No. 9 Allen street, during her premises, and she notified the police. Lieutenant Cr and Inspectors Demery and Kennedy took down the washing, packed the clothing in a basket and returned them to the owner.

Gaffney Testifies in Graft Inquiry

NEW YORK, March 21.—James E. Gaffney, president of the Boston National Baseball Club, testified at the Grand Jury inquiry on graft on the State highways and the Catskill aqueduct. Gaffney, who is a close friend of Charles Francis Murphy, Tammany leader, did not sign a waiver of immunity.

King George Sells Patent for $25,000

LONDON, March 21.—King George has just sold his patent for a movable fireplace for $25,000. In the workingmen's flat which is being erected in South London on the estate of the Duchy of Lancaster, this novel fireplace is being installed. It is so constructed that when fixed in the wall dividing two rooms it can be moved backward or forward, so as to make one fire serve for both rooms.

FORMER MISS GARNETT DANIELS, whose name first attracted Alfred Noyes, the English poet, to know her husband.

AMERICAN GIRL'S NAME, GARNETT WON POET NOYES

Poets differ.

Shakespeare asked: "What's in a name?" as though a name didn't matter much.

But Alfred Noyes, the present-day British poet, thinks a name matters a heap. Mr. Noyes, who is to read from his works in Tremont Temple on Tuesday evening, March 31, was first attracted to his wife by her name.

Mrs. Noyes was Miss Garnett Daniels, daughter of the late Colonel B. G. Daniels, U. S. A.

The garnet is Mr. Noyes' favorite stone, and he liked the name of the American girl he had just met. And he found in a minute or less that he liked the girl, liked her desperately, loved her and all that, as he told her over and over again as soon as he plucked up courage to declare himself. The poetic young English collegian couldn't take "no" and he won the American girl.

The marriage has resulted most happily. Mrs. Noyes is accompanying her gifted husband on his American tour, appearing at every lecture he has given.

Girl's $1,000 Jewels Burned at Wellesley

One girl, it became known today as an echo of the big fire at Wellesley, lost over $1,000 worth of jewelry when she abandoned her room in the blazing dormitory to aid the fire fighting brigade. She was not a student, but was being entertained as the guest of a senior.

Owing to a generous response of colleges to Wellesley's appeal for aid, the famous institution will be able to reopen April 7. Harvard, Tufts, the University of Pennsylvania, Technology and Clark University have all offered aid.

"The prompt offers of neighboring colleges to lend us equipment and material have greatly helped us and are much appreciated," said President Pendleton today. "Tufts College has placed at the disposal of our department of zoology for temporary use during the Spring term as large amount of valuable and necessary material for the laboratory work of the department.

Argue Taxation for Forest Lands

The legislative Committee on Taxation heard arguments for the proposed bills for taxing forest lands. Professor Charles J. Bullock of Harvard, and William D. T. Trowbridge, chairman of the commission on taxation of wild and forest lands, favored the bills, which are designed to encourage forestry.

Seven Are Killed in Building Collapse

PHILADELPHIA, March 21.—Seven persons were killed and four were injured when the three-story brick house at No. 75 South Ironinger street collapsed, burying them beneath tons of bricks, beams and mortar. The dead are: Mary Pernell, fifty-eight; Martha Pernell, his wife, forty-six; Lizzie Johnson, thirty; John White, seventy; Levi Waters, thirteen; Wesley Goldborough, twenty-six; Howard Scott.

GREAT PROTEST ON SURRENDER TO ENGLAND

NEW YORK, March 21.—A mighty protest against the United States surrendering to Great Britain's demand that American domestic commerce be forced to pay tolls in using the Panama Canal was voiced in a huge mass-meeting of citizens last night at Carnegie Hall.

In impassioned, patriotic eloquence powerful speakers reflecting the sentiment of the vast assemblage called upon President Wilson and Congress to stand firm against England's effort to bring about the repeal of the exemption clause for America's ships in the Panama Canal bill. Amid a stirring scene a set of vigorous resolutions was passed severely condemning England's attempt to trample the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine. A copy of the will be taken at ambassador Page for seeking to serve England by the betrayal of America.

CARNEGIE HALL FILLED.

The President's policy of trying to throw a sop to Great Britain by yielding America's rights on its own canal was roundly denounced both in the resolutions and in the speeches.

The immense meeting, fraught with so much importance to its possible effect upon the action of Congress, was notable not alone in the trend of the speeches but in the temper of the audience.

Carnegie Hall was filled to the topmost gallery. A spirit of dead earnest was manifest. It was orderly, intelligent, fervent, effective, patriotic. America and inspiring.

When the war was sternly pointed to the duty of of lawmakers in Washington to maintain America's rights the throng evidenced its sympathy by rousing cheers.

"NO MORE TYPICAL "TOWN MEETING" was ever held in Carnegie Hall. No more representative gathering has ever been called to assemble in New York. When at 8 o'clock the hall was jammed to its capacity and hundreds had been turned away, the band upon the stage struck up "America," at once the great throng arose.

"WE ARE AMERICANS."

G. Murray Hurlburt, one of the committee of citizens who initiated the massmeeting, spoke briefly, outlining the proposition of gathering as an effort to show the President and Congress what the metropolis of America thinks of the right of American ships in the Panama Canal.

"We are with you," yelled a voice in the gallery, and the assemblage broke into a ripple of applause.

Supreme Court Justice Samuel Seabury, introduced as the chairman of the gathering, outlined the spirit of the occasion at the start when he exclaimed in clarion tones that could be to the top of the hall:

"We are Americans and we want to convince the world that we consider the Panama Canal an American canal."

Justice Seabury plunged into the heart of the talk, a keen dissection of the theory that as the United States has built the Panama Canal through territory acquired by it, it has a right to exempt its own ships from tolls if it sees fit.

Former Congressman Littlefield, a rugged type of "Yankee lawyer," was introduced. Justice Seabury was coming from the State, "a conspicuous son of which, James G. Blaine, had raised his eloquent voice for the accomplishment of the Panama Canal."

With no mincing of words, Mr. Littlefield pointed out that the platform of the Democratic party, upon which President Wilson was elected, had declared unequivocally for free tolls.

"And that platform has not been lived up to," cried the former Congressman. He alluded to President Wilson's assertion in a campaign speech that "our platform is not meaningless to catch flies;" that, now that Wilson "no longer needs the flies, not having caught the flies, he does what he wants."

THE "CROCODILE" ROOT.

Bainbridge Colby threw the house into a paroxysm of cheers when, in characterising Senator Root's attitude on the canal tolls, he exclaimed:

"The crocodile root, Senator, is the former attorney for the trans-continental railroads, Senator Root, is the that of the itinerant Chautauquan who occupies the office, but who is confined to the boundaries of Secretary of State."

A howl of approval went up when Mr. Colby adverted to the "specious, transparent buncombe of England."

The pose of Great Britain, Mr. Colby said, is that of a "designing motive, not believed even by those who assume it."

Holy Jumper Asks Town's Forgiveness

WEBSTER, March 21.—Frank Mortimer Messenger, national committeeman of the Prohibition party and promoter of the church, known as the Holy Jumpers, has issued a public appeal to the people of New England praying for forgiveness for holding them in disrespect and publicly declaring they were deceived. Messenger left a $15,000 position in Boston to organize the Holiness Church at a salary of $1,000.

Church Burned by Tramp's Pipe Spark

MONTCLAIR, N. J., March 21.—That a tramp who sought shelter in the First Congregational Church accidentally spilled fire from his pipe during a recent cold spell, causing fire of the structure is the belief of the local police. The building burned last night, with $300,000 loss.

ORANGE DAY OBSERVED ALL OVER COUNTRY

Rich, golden fruit of rare delight,
Enjoyed by all, from young to old,
Make your yellow coin to bright,
A toast fit for a king you hold,
Let's eat our fill, no better way
To celebrate the Orange Day.

Have an orange?

Want for?

Why, today is Orange Day, in honor of the Great American Orange. California sent the date, all on account of her overwhelming bumper crop of that delicious, golden fruit.

All over the United States today people are eating oranges for Orange Day.

They are being eaten whole and in quarters and sections and by the half-section. They are being squeezed for their juice. They are being cut up with sugar on 'em, or eaten in puddings, or put in jellies, or ices or any one of the thousand or more ways to eat an orange.

BIG CROP AND GOOD ONE.

California orange growers have "struck oil" this year, in this respect. They have succeeded, by intensive farming and highly scientific methods, in producing not only an unusually large crop but an extra superior one.

So the growers asked the rest of the United States to join in an Orange Day celebration. Today, March 21, was the date fixed.

How celebrate?

Out in California, where they make the golden fruit, they are having a lot of pretty a-d picturesque celebrations. They are giving away oranges to tourists. They are eating them—the oranges, not the tourists—by the bushel.

In Los Angeles, for instance, girls from Covina, properly-chaperoned, of course, are standing in every hotel lobby today, distributing oranges for samples and then selling them by the carton.

The transcontinental railroads are celebrating by giving special prominence to California oranges on their dining car menus. The steamboat lines plying from the Pacific Coast are doing the same.

The rest of the country is helping, for the idea of Orange Day has been received with cheer by the Atlantic seaboard and up and down, to Canada and the Mexican line.

The way the rest of the country is helping is to EAT oranges today, California oranges, of course.

STATE'S REAL WEALTH.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson, the widely known medical writer, who is visiting Los Angeles and Southern California, sums up the Orange Day idea when he says:

"It was the golden opportunity to place the golden fruit of the Golden State before the whole world. California is the garden spot of the world and oranges rank first among her products.

"It may be true that all that glitters is not gold, but if oranges are not gold, they certainly rank next."

People used to think that California was called the "Golden State" because they found gold there. But now they know better. The real gold of California is in her oranges.

Ruth Smith Is Sargent School's Best Gymnast

Ruth Smith of Oberlin, Ohio, who scored 123 points at the first gymnastic meet of the Sargent Normal School of Cambridge, has been declared the champion athlete of the school. She has also been awarded a special varsity "S." She is guard on the basket ball team.

At the meet Miss Dorothy Vestal of New York was second with 111 points, Hazel Keith, third with 109 points and Alice Arnold fourth with 108 points.

Five Near Death by Gas in West Roxbury

Five persons narrowly escaped death from coal gas pouring from a defective flue in the house at No. 161 Dudley avenue, West Roxbury, early today. Willard Toomey dragged himself to a window and attracted the attention of Patrolman Cunningham, who ran into the house with Sergeant Mitchell. Mrs. Marion Toomey, her daughter Gladys, eleven, and son Arthur, eighteen, were found overcome in rooms on the second floor. An infant child was the only one not affected.

MANN HITS WILSON

WASHINGTON, March 21.—"When the Moroccan bandit, Raisuli, held Perdicaris, an American citizen, his prisoner," declared Republican Leader Mann in the House, "our Secretary of State sent this message to the Sultan of Morocco: 'This government wants Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead.' Had we had Andrew Jackson in the White House at that time that is what he would have said. We had Theodore Roosevelt as President; that is what he said.

"Would to God we had one or the other of them in the White House today to deal with the Mexican situation."

Mann also attacked the President's attitude on Panama Canal tolls as being hostile to cheaper freight rates.

EUGENIC GIRL HIDES AFTER 40TH PROPOSAL

DETROIT, Mich., March 21.—There is in hiding in Detroit a handsome young woman of perfect measurements, according to the accepted standards, who is willing to become the eugenic bride of a eugenic husband, and whose chief aim in life is to be the mother of a eugenic baby. Her name is Miss Jean Young. She "eloped" unwed from Cleveland with forty eugenic proposals from forty eugenic young men who are positive they are the proper candidates.

Miss Young resided at 6705 Detroit avenue, Cleveland, until her announcements here first to the amount of forty proposals of marriage. Also she was surprised so many men who believed themselves practically perfect. The announcement was made several weeks ago and was immediately followed by a number of proposals, and since then the communications have been piling until Miss Young packed forty in her bag and came to Detroit, keeping her address a secret.

One entirely unromantic offer was received. The writer was more interested in a eugenic kitchen and eugenic housework than anything else. He wrote: "The perfect measurements were to him a guarantee of perfect meals in both of the mentioned departments. Another wrote that Miss Young would get a combination of eugenic and unkissed husband by taking him, as his lips have been untouched by woman since he attended a children's party at the age of ten years.

HUNT SUSPECT FOR THEFT OF $5,000 JEWELS

The Boston police were asked today to look for George Smith, who is absent from the household of Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Jealous of Oxford.

Jewels to the value of $5,000 are missing from the Jealous home. Dispatches from Oxford this noon said that a woman named Cora Wheeler had been arrested by the State police on another charge. The State police say that she posed as Smith's wife. She was employed, with Smith, in the Jealous home.

The State police have asked the Boston police to look up Smith's record, as they say that he is wanted in Philadelphia and Boston for looting homes where he and the Wheeler woman have been employed.

The missing jewelry includes:

One and one-half carat diamond ring.

Six-pearl ring.

Two-carat ruby ring.

Amethyst and diamond ring.

Pearl cluster ring, with seven diamonds.

Diamond brooch.

Diamond and emerald locket.

Diamond and ruby ring.

BELMONT DRAGS PAST OF SON'S BRIDE IN COURT

NEW YORK, March 21.—While Augus Belmont and his eldest son, August Belmont, Jr., leaned forward and listened intently to every word, young Mrs. Raymond Belmont christened Ethel H. Lindner, and known as "Ethel Lorraine," told in Justice Greenbaum's court a remarkable story of her meeting, marriage and desertion by the banker's youngest son.

She is suing for separation, with alimony. It is admitted by the Belmont family that her husband abandoned her eight days after their marriage. He is now in Europe, the guest of Sir Isaac Cunard. No defence to the plea for separation has been interposed, but Belmont's attorneys assert he cannot pay alimony. His fortune, originally $150,000, has been reduced in four years to $40 000, they say, as the result of the wild extravagances of his wife.

Fashionably clad, Mrs. Belmont made an interesting study. Her calmness under fire was remarkable. Only once was her composure ruffled. Then, perilously near to tears, she covered her face with a handkerchief and waited until her counsel exhausted every argument in a vain effort to save her from the humiliation of telling of her prenuptial relations with young Belmont.

THEIR FIRST MEETING.

It was the first time I ever saw my distinguished relative," she said afterward, "and it made me nervous when I saw Mr. Belmont's eyes boring into me. It was worse than I ever imagined it would be."

The witness admitted she never was on the stage. "I never worked anywhere," she said, almost in a whisper."

"One month after I met Mr. Belmont, on February 19, 1909," she continued, "he took me to an apartment in West Forty-ninth street. From that time until we were married he was my sole means of support. He gave me $200 a month during 1909, $250 a month during 1910 and $300 during 1911 and 1912.

"He visited me constantly, taking me out in his automobiles to the best restaurants and theatres. We were happy together. Once, when he broke his automobile and was afraid to let his father hear of it, I gave him $3,000 to get another. It was money he had given me, of course, but it was a loan and I expected to get it back. I never did.

"Several times I was asked to sign releases of all obligations on him. In March, 1912, I signed a general release in return for $20,000, which was paid me. Raymond gave he his note then for $5000 more, but I never got it.

SIGNED A RELEASE.

"Prior to that time I had signed a release in return for an income of $200 a month for life. Later I signed a new one for $300.

"In November, 1912, I went for a trip to California. When I came back Raymond wanted to marry me. I considered it a long time. Often I argued with him that, in view of my past and his family and other circumstances, I feared we would not be happy together. He said I was essential to him, and so consented.

"On our marriage night my husband's brother came to our apartment and tried to make me take $10,000 to call it off and leave Raymond. I said I didn't want his money; I wanted him to stick to me. A short time ago my lawyers got a letter from August Belmont, offering me $500 a year to drop the case. I wouldn't take that.

"I have only $1,000 left. All of the money he gave me I spent for furniture, clothing, traveling and other expenses. I am almost penniless."

Dr. Chapin Scouts Medical Theories

"There is no evidence that quinine cures malaria; that pollution of water supply is a cause of typhoid; that vaccination prevents smallpox; that antitoxin has decreased diptheria to a great extent," declared Dr. Charles V. Chapin, superintendent of health at Providence, in a lecture at the Harvard Medical School. "Public health officers are likely to follow any plausible-sounding measure for sanitation like sheep."

KIMBALL'S BRIDE AT BAR TODAY TO PRESS NON-SUPPORT CHARGE

Mrs. Katherine Kimball, who presses charge of non-support against professional golfer today.

Mrs. Katherine Dunton Kimball, who lived with her husband, Richard Kimball, the professional golfer, only twenty-one days following their elopement and marriage in Detroit, appeared in Brighton District Court today to press her charge of non-support against Kimball, but the latter was absent. Harvey H. Pratt, Kimball's counsel, submitted a certificate, signed by Dr. Frank E. Lord, and witnessed by a justice of the peace, that Kimball was prostrated by a complete nervous breakdown. Mr. Pratt said his client would be unable to answer the non-support charge for two months at least. Judge Barnard continued the case for just that time, until May 21.

Counsel said that Kimball had made up the arrears in the $6-a-week payments to his wife. The payments are to be continued pending settlement of the case.

After the hearing Mrs. Kimball, who is twenty years old and of attractive appearance, said:

"Some people have been trying to get me to go back and live with my husband. But there will be no reconciliation for me. I'm not going back to live with him.

"I didn't know Mr. Kimball was sick. He didn't seem very sick when I saw him last Tuesday."

Mrs. Kimball was bookkeeper in a sporting goods store in Detroit where Kimball bought goods. He came to pay a bill, met the pretty bookkeeper, was deeply impressed, wooed and won her. They eloped on October 13 and were married. There was a honeymoon at Scituate. Then the couple set up housekeeping at No. 8 Reservoir court, Brighton.

In Christmas week Mrs. Kimball swore out a warrant for her husband's arrest on the ground of non-support. The case was continued from time to time.

"TECH" OPEN TO WELLESLEY GIRLS? SURE!

Saved!

The poor Wellesley College girls, burned out in the College Hall fire, can come right into Tech—if Gale Shedd has his say.

And who is Gale Shedd?

He is a Tech senior. He has written to The Tech a warm invitation to all the Wellesley damsels to enter the Tech laboratories. His letter reads in part:

"I propose that the institute freely extend the privileges of its vast and well-equipped laboratories to our sister college. I am sure there is plenty of room—for instance, there is a vacant desk right next to mine—and even though it were crowded what true Tech man would be so discourteous as to refuse the half of his desk to a fair neighbor in distress? The profits of the supply room could be enormously inflated by adding candy and hairpins to the stock in trade. The adoption of this plan would increase the interest in the students in their work. I will wager everything I have saved for Junior Week that, if it be adopted, no student will ever fail for the next eight weeks. Since of late we have been prone to complain with everything at the slightest provocation, I can see no reason why, when the benefits to be derived are so general, that we cannot embrace this particular opportunity.

"It behooveth us to act quickly in this matter lest another institution recently inherited by us, whose sitdents have been our rivals in this field before, should beat us."

Shedd's reference to "another institution recently absorbed by us," will make a terrific hit (?) with Harvard men.

Also, what does Shedd mean by "embrace this opportunity"? He can't be referring to the girls.

Kaiser Will Not See New Grandson

Mme. Aguglia Plays 'La Figlia di Jorio'

Mme. Mimi Aguglia and her company appeared in "La Figlia di Jorio," a pastoral tragedy in three acts by Gabrielle D' Annunsio, at the Hub Theatre last night.

Mme. Aguglia is seen at her best as Mila. In this play she is a tragic actress of the first rank. From the moment of her unusually effective entrance, a hunted creature fleeing blindly from an infuriated mob, her performance in every detail was significant and compelling. The beauty of her voice, the eloquence of her eyes, the elemental simplicity and grace of her gestures, all these were constantly impressive.

Bliss Perry Urges "Pure Book" Law

Literary criticism in American book reviews is lacking in good taste and intellectual candor, according to Professor Bliss Perry of Harvard University, in the first of the annual series of Bromley lectures on Journalism at Yale. "The courts insist on labels for food," he said. "There is no pure food law for books."

Will Honor Emmet.

A meeting of the John C. Redmond Branch of the United Irish League will be held Sunday at Armory Hall, Roxbury, to celebrate the anniversary of Robert Emmet.

SEEK SCHOOL GIRL AS 'QUEEN OF THE MOVIES'

BROCKTON, March 21.—Alice Moynahan, an eighteen-year-old high chool girl, is thinking seriously of becoming a "Queen of the Movies." The girl is remarkably beautiful, and has received many offers from artists anxious to have her as a model. Recently two moving picture houses offered her engagements to go West and pose for films.

Miss Moynahan lives at No. 42 Wheeler avenue. She is so pretty that other girls don't envy her—they come to her for advice.

"For one thing, don't dance the tango," is her first warning. "It makes big feet. To be pretty, you must have a pretty face, a shapely figure, and small feet. Big feet will spoil it all.

"For the rest, it is largely a matter of bed at 9 o'clock, healthy food and lots of exercise."

Paderewski Made Nervous by Ragtime

NEW YORK, March 21.—Miss Margaret Case, playing ragtime at a dansant so annoyed Paderewski in his own room nearby that he requested her to desist so that he might calm his own nerves to play. He accomplished his request with champagne for the entire party at the dansant.

"State on Suffrage Does 'Hesitation'"

"On the suffrage question Massachusetts is doing the hesitation waltz," said State Auditor Pope at the first rally of the Massachusetts Men's Suffrage League at Huntington Hall, "and unless women in this State are granted the ballot, I fear that this hesitation will still continue. We seem to appear undecided, though the logical thing to do is certainly evident."

Mary Shaw to Speak at Suffragists' Tea

PRESS PERJURY CHARGES FROM LE BLANC TRIAL

Lawrence F. Smith, accused of attempted subornation of perjury and subornation of perjury, and James E. Dumont, accused of perjury in the Hattie Le Blanc trial, will be placed on trial Wednesday.

Following the Le Blanc girl's acquittal of the killing of Carenca Glover, the Waltham laundryman, Smith and Dumont were indicted by the Grand Jury January 1, 1912.

Former District Attorney Higgins failed to bring the cases to trial, but on February 5, 1913, they were placed on file. The cases were taken up again at the request of Attorney Melvin M. Johnson.

VOGEL, PARTNER OF SIEGEL, ILL AND MISSING

NEW YORK, March 21.—Frank E. Vogel, indicted with Henry Siegel for failure of the Siegel stores companies and wrecking of the Siegel bank, and free on $25,000 bail on three counts charging grand larceny and obtaining money under false pretense, has disappeared, so far as the Federal Court knows. His counsel, Stanchfield & Levy, admit that they do not know "just where he is."

Vogel was ordered to attempt of court yesterday by United States Commissioner Gilchrist. His attorneys were ordered to produce him Monday afternoon for examination.

A dispatch from Chicago says Levy Mayer, Vogel's counsel there, says he is in Chicago Ill, but that Mr. Mayer would not reveal the exact whereabouts of Vogel in that city.

Siegfried P. Hartman, appearing with Siegel as the representative of Louis S. Levy, his counsel, at yesterday's hearing asked for a postponement until Tuesday. He explained that Mr. Levy was busy and could not attend.

"Well," said the commissioner, "it is his duty to be here. He knew this hearing was to take place and he should have been present. Where is Vogel?"

"Mr. Vogel is not here," weakly responded Hartman.

"Where is he?" demanded the commissioner.

"I do not know," replied Hartman. "He is a very sick man."

"His examination will take place Monday. Produce him here at 2 o'clock in the afternoon with a sworn statement as to the illness."

Horses Killed, Man Hurt at Crossing

John T. Scully, twenty-four, of No. 56 Everett street, East Boston, barely escaped with his life early today when the two-horse wagon which he was driving was run into by an inbound passenger train on the Water street grade crossing of the Boston & Maine at Cambridge. One horse was killed. The other was so badly injured than he had to be shot. The wagon was completely demolished and Scully was thrown a distance of thirty feet. He was rushed to the Cambridge Relief Hospital where he is suffering from internal injuries.

Telephone Station Register

¶ For several years electricians have been attempting to perfect some device which would show at the subscriber's station a record of measured service calls. Such a device has recently been perfected in the shape of a subscriber's station register.

¶ This register will advise a subscriber of the calls charged against his telephone and enable him to ascertain if unauthorized calls are being made from his instrument during his absence.

¶ The charge for the register will be $3.00 per year. We have secured a limited number for delivery on May 1, and will be able to furnish as many as may be called for after June 1.

FIGARO ATTACK ON CAILLAUX

Secret Negotiations of Former French Minister of Finance Shown in Article in Calmette's Paper—It Was This Story That Stirred Mme. Caillaux to Kill Editor.

THIS IS THE HEADING in the Figaro—"The Secret Negotiations of M. Caillaux, Protector of Rochette"—for the article by M. Calmette which led to his death.

Les Négociations secrètes de M. Caillaux Protecteur de Rochette

Under the heading, "The Secret Negotiations of M. Caillaux, Protector of Rochette," in the Figaro of March 16, M. Gaston Calmette in his campaign against Mr. Caillaux wrote as follows concerning the new famous Rochette affair, which is being publicly investigated:

"The series of articles that for the last three months we have been devoting every day to the secret manoeuvres and schemes of Mr. Caillaux has allowed us to show, in our exultation at the work of healthful understanding here, that the efforts of the Minister of Finance had been constantly directed to one single object, 'The quest of money.'

"We have shown the demagogic plutocrat (according to the stinging appellation applied to him by Mr. Briand) on the watch for all the public or private operations which could feed the war treasury, on which rests all his fame.

"We have told of the manipulation on the Bourse which allowed his well informed friends to increase without any risk the mysterious resources which they intend to use for the defence of his disastrous policy or which they recognize as indispensable for his costly praise.

"We have revealed some of the mistakes that he repeatedly made formerly in Morocco, which brought about, in connection with the claims of Germany, the dismemberment of our colony of the Congo.

"A JEALOUS MASTER."

"We have proved that in keeping —illegally—on the list of the Paris market the lottery bonds of Credit Foncier Egyptien, in causing the laws of France to bow before a prohibited foreign security, in which he was personally interested, this enemy of the savings of the nation and enemy of the safety of the country was also the enemy of justice.

"It remains for us now to show that, unknown to a Parliament which he made game of by lavishly scattering it his injurious subterfuges, Mr. Caillaux has placed all the power of his ministerial functions in the service of a swindler.

VOUCHES FOR ACCURACY.

"And if the big money getter again evades, thanks to the mistake of a date or the confusion of a word, by one of those audacious denials which he is the habit of making, in the Figaro as well as at the Luxembourg or on the Bourse, I beg more than ever the great public which is kind enough to read my words, the estimable colleagues who are kind enough to reproduce these unbelievable things—I beg them to trust in the absolute verity of my every statement as well as in my complete accuracy and my perfect loyalty.

"I place before them these revelations, fully conscious of the struggle, with deep sadness, which I have shed of anybody, without fear of any one whatsoever, with the lofty sentiment of the task that each one of us, whatever the cost, should accomplish at this critical time in the supreme interest of the country, soon to be consulted.

THE ROCHETTE AFFAIR.

"Everybody thinks he understands the Rochette affair, but no one has penetrated its mysterious windings in their true details.

"Nevertheless a committee of inquiry was named two years ago by the Chamber of Deputies and proceeded to make the most conscientious investigation. On March 26, 1913, Mr. Jaures, who was a member of this committee and directed the inquiry—with as much zeal as loyalty, it is fitting to recognize—brought before the tribune of the Palais Bourbon the results of the patient work of this commission and denounced indignantly the interference of the ministry, which seemed to occur in certain moments, but which had been denied because they left no traces.

"Rochette, arrested on March 20, 1909, in consequence of charges that are well known, had enough influence to obtain a month later, on May 8, in spite of the opposition of the examining magistrate, the provisional liberator of being temporarily set at liberty. This caused astonishment "for some days, then it was no more spoken of, and it was as an accused person not under arrest that he appeared on July 27, 1910, before the Correctional Tribunal and was condemned to prison and appeal, ultimately pursuing during this long period the depredations that he had been practising on private fortunes.

PROTECTION CHARGED.

"From May 8, 1909, in spite of the judgment that had smitten him and condemned him to prison, Rochette thus, with the calmness of a man who feels that he is powerfully protected, resumed the direction of his issues of securities. He continued his bold speculations, which were often lucky for his friends and his operations were disastrous for the 'old soul' which he unceasingly continued to empty. He had already plundered the owners of small savings to the extent of seventy-two millions before his arrest. But the figure was of little account to his protectors, and after his first examination the period of relaxation he had obtained in the prosecution he succeeded in again taking sixty-eight millions from the public, who saw in the powerful friendship of which he was the exceptional object the sure indication of his influence and consequently the guarantee of his enterprise. He had only to float an issue and the subscribers rushed in flocks to his appeal.

"In the course of the evidence found by the committee of inquiry Mr. Jaures on several occasions entered to detail what were the manoeuvres in consequence of which he was thus enabled to obtain the delays necessary by prescription. The president of the Chamber of Correctional Appeals, Mr. Bidault de l'Isle, on being questioned, replied: 'No one intervened with me. I granted stays of final Appeals. Mr. Bidault de l'Isle, on being questioned, replied: 'No one intervened with me. I granted stays of final Appeals. Mr. Rochette's counsel, Maitre Maurice Bernard, is a very busy lawyer. He had the big Duez affair and he had need of delays.'

PROOF IS LACKING.

"The reply was, in fact, justified. Maitre Maurice Bernard has one of the largest and best filled lists of cases before the courts, but what would have been useful to add was that the president went far beyond the delays very properly asked by the defence because the Minister commanded them.

"Mr. Jaures, whom the mystery of these unexplained delays annoyed, informed his colleagues in the Chamber in the memorable session of March 20, 1912, of possible governmental tampering, of which he had not been able to find any proof, but which he considered as a matter of suspicion, for the Republic if ever proof of them were found.

"Supposing it was true, he cried, amidst the applause of his friends, 'If it were true that the public prosecutor intervened to prolong beyond ordinary delays the stays asked by counsel; if it were true that the public prosecutor had aided in arranging for Rochette more room for his continued and renewed operations; if it were true, under a much more superior position, that he did it on the instructions of a chief of government who was not his immediate chief, who then yielded to other motives than those which are prevalent in the halls of justice—it would be an affair which the Chamber ought to demand thorough enlightment.

"Parliament has the duty of demanding that everything be told to it.'

FOR AN OPEN BOOK.

"Mr. Jaures is right. Everything should be told to Parliament. And, if indignant at all the lies and filth it is libelled, at all the criminal responsibilities with which it is overwhelmed, its conscience recoils, the punishment would be brief and certain.

"The revolution is summed up entirely in two dates.

"In order that prescription might be obtained by Rochette, so that he might evade just punishment for his crimes against the public's savings, it was necessary that his case should not come before the court on the date set so long previously, of April 27, 1911. It was necessary to reach the three-year limit, which brings prescription of the public action and then to obtain retrospectively the quashing of all the acts of the prosecution undertaken from 1909 to 1911.

"Fortunately for the insecure banker, the vigilance of the plaintiffs, for whom he has rendered manifold private services, among others peculiarly services for the benefit of a newspaper which was ardently supporting the Deputy de Manees and Senator Boivy, did not allow this since it is necessary to mention him by name—became Minister of Finance on March 2 of that very year, 1911, in the Cabinet of which Mr. Monis was president of the council and Mr. Antonin Perrier was keeper of the seals.

THE ACCUSATIONS.

"At once Mr. Caillaux, grateful, made it his first care to assure for Rochette the prescription which near by escaped him.

"The affair was promptly adjusted installed on March 3 at the Ministry of Finance, he caused the procureur general to be called on March 23 before the president of the council, Mr. Monis, for Mr. Caillaux, as we have from many instances, rarely works in the open. He charges other persons with these ambiguous tasks. There was needed to make it cost not right the head of the government himself—the benefactor and well friend who would not have the courage to resist and who would have the power to speak decisively.

"In fact, the excellent Mr. Monis much bored by such a mission, extrary to all the practices, contrary to all laws, conferred with the procureur general, sent for expressly by him.

"At first he was much annoyed, at Mr. Fabre also.

"Mr. Monis, president of the council, replied to him coldly, evasively of the Rochette affair. He told him that Mr. Caillaux was interested in not having it come before the courts on April 27, and in having it postponed until October or November, after the long vacations, and that he should do the service for the minister of finance.

"Mr. Fabre refused. Besides, he considered this delay impossible. The series of hearings was for at least one month reserved entirely for the Rochette case by the president of the correctional chamber, Mr. Bidult de l'Isle.

STAY IS SOUGHT.

"Very well, see on our behalf Mr. Bidault de l'Isle and tell him that I have given you the order to obtain from him a stay of the Rochette case until after the vacations.'

"Such was the imperative insistence of Mr. Monis. The president of his council added:

"Tell him expressly that it is an order, and then come and bring me yourself the reply.'

"The president, Mr. Bidault de l'Isle, at first refused with indignation on several occasions and then for seven days he yielded in despair and granted the postponement that Mr. Caillaux demanded to save Rochette.

"The prescription was thus obtained. Rochette was saved. He had in addition only to await the quashing of the procedure, which was pronounced on February 2, 1912. And when to his great astonishment, a new ministry presided over by Mr. Poincare, wanted to begin a new trial, Rochette took to flight. Free today, freer than all of us, better protected than all of us, he will read, while smiling, this indictment recital of his past anxieties.

FIARS NO QUESTION.

"All the magistrates of whom I speak are here. Let them be released from the professional secrecy which must weight heavy on their resentful souls!

"I swear, for my own part, that I have told the horrible truth, and I will cry it out until my strength is exhausted.

"It is Mr. Caillaux who called for, obtained, demanded the postponements which assured prescription and immunity for Rochette.

"It is Caillaux who permitted Rochette to continue during the interminable length of the trial the speculations for which he had been arrested, prosecuted and once condemned. The great protector, the accomplice in consequence of the insecure banker is he.

"It is Mr. Caillaux who, in exchange for subsidies granted his newspapers, has facilitated, prolonged, multiplied the criminal propaganda of this adventurer of the Bourse with the public whom he ruined.

"The demagogic plutocrat, there he is! The man of the Congo! The man who recently embroiled us with England and Spain; the man of the lottery bonds, of the Credit Foncier Egyptien, of the Rochette honorariums of presence and of the honorariums of services; the man of secret combinations and of criminal interventions—there he is! He is the Minister of Finance of the Doumergue Cabinet.

"PROUD OF MY DUTY."

"The Rochette affair the committee of inquiry and Mr. Jaures have never followed up. They have guessed it, they have sensed it, and they stopped frightened at so many illegalities, disheartened by so many crimes.

"Very well. Here it is. It is revealed in all its truth to the public, whose savings have been stolen, it is summed up in one word, 'Infamy!' It is summed up in one name, 'Caillaux.' And, proud of my duty accomplished, I sign

HIS WIFE WINS.

A Story in Two Parts.

PART II.

CHAPTER I.

Mrs. Buttin was one of those softvoiced, smiling women who could accept trouble where it was not, and where it was could scent it double.

She began every sentence with "Yes, dear," and ended it with "See," and was altogether a very disagreeable little person.

"Why, listen, honey," she said as she took Eugenie in her arms. "What's the matter? What's Hector been doing to you? Tell me quickly. You might here to take care of you. See?"

"You'll excuse me, Buttin," said Hector hastily; "but a we got to get to my office. Been spending all morning in a family row, and called down for something I never did nor dreamed of. You know what I mean, and I'm late, too. Good-by."

And before Mrs. Buttin or his mother-in-law could summon words to express her wrath, he was away.

"I always suspected Hector was not quite right in his mind," said Mrs. Buttin. "Listen, does he talk that way about women all the time?"

"He does—and worse," said Mme. Duvallon.

"Listen. Will you go for a little stroll in the art gallery. See? I want to talk in private."

Buttin obediently strolled.

CHAPTER II.

He came back to the drawing room just as the maid was presenting a card to Eugenie Borisart. Eugenie read it in a bewildered tone:

"Mr. Julius Cornillac—who wishes to see his double, of which he has heard so much."

The women stood speechless for a moment. Mrs. Buttin was the first to break the silence: "Listen, honey," she said, "let him come in; see?"

"Show him in, Jane," breathed Eugenie.

And, smiling, confident, though politely embarrassed, there strode straight into the fire of those questioning eyes Mr. Hector Borisart in his role and garb of Julius Cornillac.

His new personality breathed from his gorgeous suit, from his perfumed hair, even from his too-ecclesiastical walking stick. He approached Mrs. Buttin with an appealing smile.

"Mrs. Borisart, I apologize for this——"

"Oh, listen," she exclaimed, quite disarmed, "I am not Mrs. Borisart. That is she; see?"

"Your pardon, Madame." He turned to face the half hopeful, half doubting eyes of his wife.

"Might I ask to see Mr. Borisart? I have been mistaken for him from one end of Paris to the other. I understand he is of American birth, but that he is my perfect duplicate in every feature I am told."

"Mr. Borisart is not at home; won't you sit down?" invited Mme. Duvallon in a voice that rumbled like a threatening volcano.

"Thank you—no kind of you to receive me. It's all been so very amusing—amusing, I say—but at times very serious," he chuckled reminiscently. "Do you know a young woman of my—er—acquaintance became very angry with me at one time because she saw Mr. Borisart in a motor car with Mrs. Borisart. I had a terrible time explaining."

Eugenie stood, trembling before the visitor. She could not speak.

"I hope Mr. Borisart has had no such unpleasant experiences through my innocent fault," the visitor rippled on.

"Oh—no—o," said Eugenie.

"Only a few," said Mme. Duvallon.

"Ah, indeed. I regret that he is not here. We could exchange some interesting experiences."

He was interrupted by the sound of the bell.

"General Leonidas Wool; Miss Zenobie Wool; why it's the General!" exclaimed Mme. Duvallon. "How delightful."

Something very like a groan escaped the lips of M. Cornillac.

"Zenobie—here!" he panted under his breath. But he held ground.

In a few seconds the gushing music teacher, enter on the arm of her stately uncle, the General. He saw the General greet his mother-in-law, Mme. Duvallon, with the cordiality of an old friend; and, as a last guilty hope clung to the reign of terror he saw Zenobie suddenly clasped in the arms of Mrs. Buttin.

Hector could not see, but he listened; and in a moment he had caught the introduction.

Zenobie uttered a little cry of delight.

"Why, Julius! isn't this charming? Ima, this is M. Cornillac, my fiance,' she cried in rapture.

"Fi—deed!"

And under the eyes of his wife and his mother-in-law, Hector was introduced to the General as Zenobie's future spouse.

CHAPTER III.

Almost fainting from the strain of his predicament he found himself at last alone in the library with Mr. Buttin. The others had gone to the art gallery.

Overcome by a sudden impulse of queer terror, Hector bolted for the door. His only thought was to get out of that house—his house—and forth forever. He might have done it, for Buttin made no opposition; but in the doorway Hector's foot caught in the rug and he flopped to the floor.

He tried to get up and go on, but he flopped again. His left leg was useless. He could only sag to the sofa and sit down wincing with pain.

"Buttin," he cried, "Buttin, I'm lost. I'm not Cornallac; I'm Borisart; and I've got wives present and future under one roof. Buttin, save me."

"What can I do?"

"Go to Paradise street—No. 246—get my regular clothes and come back here like the devil on wings. First put that screen around the sofa; I can't budge; I think I'm killed."

"No, you've got a dislocated patella," said Buttin, examining the leg.

"Never mind that; get my clothes quick."

Buttin dashed away. Mrs. Buttin, Mme. Duvallon and Mrs. Borisart came into the library.

"Do you believe a word of that story?" demanded Mme. Duvallon.

"Oh, I can't doubt Hector," said Eugenie. "He was never so devoted to his stoves."

"He was always a furtive-eyed rascal," said Mme. Duvallon.

"Madame," he said, "would you like to have me tell you the truth about that sea shimpie, unpretentious little thing, but——"

"No, Robin, I am too tired for poetry today."

"Listen, there's something queer about it, anyway," declared Mrs. Buttin. "I never did believe Hector could speak a word of truth, of course, but I didn't think he had nerve enough to be two men at once."

"Madame! You spurn me always Madame!" cried the poet, and he crush the heart within me by your coldness! Have you not known that I was always in love with you—that I have sustained my muse to nordic stoves for the sake of seeing you —that I——"

There was a sound from behind the screen that made Robin arise hastily with his impotent knees. Mrs. Borisart did not hear the noise, for she was fleeing from the room.

The screen fell over, and Hector, forgetting his bad leg, made one furious act to advertising poet, and caught him by the collar, thrust him out of doors with all his strength.

As Robin shot through the door Hector fell to the floor. He had kicked with the bad leg. But he knew he must get back to the sofa, and he scrambled up. To his amazement, he found he could walk perfectly well. The patella had been jarked back into place by the kick.

CHAPTER IV.

Buttin came back breathless.

"I've got 'em," he said proudly. "But I had to go through water and flame to get 'em. Your house is burned down, I got your clothes."

The ladies returned.

"Hector," exclaimed Eugenie, "you here?"

"Yes, my dear," replied Hector "with all my clothes on." He displayed his serrated suit.

"Heavens! What has happened?"

"And what may these be?" inquired Mme. Duvallon, drawing from under the table the suit or glittering garments that had of late adorned "M. Cornillac."

Mr. Buttin fled from the room. Here though he was, he could not bear the sight of Hector begging for mercy on his knees.

POLICE WOMEN FOR BOSTON ARE ASKED IN BILL

Boston will have policewomen if the bill just unanimously reported to the Legislature by the Committee on Legal Affairs becomes a law.

Several bills for policewomen were submitted this year, but that of George D. Chamberlain of Springfield is the one the committee decided to report. The proposals were received with smiles, but the hearings put the real purpose in a much more favorable light.

The point emphasized was that a woman with authority to arrest may often do much to assist in solving local problems in places where a uniformed policeman would only arouse protest or defeat the purpose for which he was sent, merely by appearing in a blue coat and brass buttons.

It was a general conclusion that special policewomen should not wear a distinctive uniform, as in their ordinary dress they can accomplish, as a rule, much more than a regular policeman. Further, it is argued, that she would be welcome while a uniformed officer would be called an intruder.

The bill would take effect upon its passage, and reads as follows: "The Mayor of a city or the Selectmen of a town may appoint one or more women as special police officers who shall have, within the limits of said city or town, all the powers conferred by law upon constables, except in relation to the service of civil process, and all the powers conferred upon the police as watchmen."

Name Yale Debaters for Suffrage Talk

NEW HAVEN, March 21.—Announcement was made of the makeup of the Yale debating teams for the sixth annual intercollegiate triangular debate between Harvard, Princeton and Yale, on March 27. Suffrage is the subject. Philip Badger of Portsmouth, N. H., heads the negative team.

Haverhill Couple 65 Years Married

HAVERHILL, N. H., March 21.—Mr. and Mrs Daniel W. Day of this town have just celebrated the sixty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. He was never farther from his native town than Concord, a distance of seventy-five miles, and Mrs. Day has been on the steam cars but once, and then she rode five miles.

Cape Woman Figures in Nullity Contest

Charles A. Twiss of Dorchester pleaded for nullity of his marriage to Maria Mayo, before Judge Raymond, in the Suffolk Divorce Court. He charged that she married Eugene Crowell of West Dennis in 1878, and Walter S. Mayo of Orleans in 1895. She married him in 1899, he said, without being legally separated from Mayo.

Sylvia Speaks from Ambulance

LONDON, March 21.—Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette, made a dramatic appearance at a meeting of suffragettes in the Limehouse district. Lying in an ambulance, attended by nurses who administered stimulants to her, she delivered a brief speech which aroused her audience to enthusiasm.

Jackson College to Have Fire Drills

Announcement was made at Jackson College today that next week a system of required fire drills would be began. Gymnasium work in the use of the rope fire escape, with which all of the rooms are provided, will be required of every girl.

Artist Lookwood Dies at Hospital

Wilton Lockwood, a leading American painter, whose portraits and flower pieces are treasured in many Boston families, is dead at the Deaconess Hospital, Longwood, after several weeks' illness. He was fifty-three years old.

WHOLE BOWDOIN CLASS PLACED ON PROBATION

BRUNSWICK, Me., March 21.—Because of a breach of college regulations regarding gymnasium work, the entire senior class at Bowdoin College was on probation today.

This announcement was made by Dean Kenneth C. M. Sills of the faculty. No statement is made as to the length of time that the probation will extend. Until the probation is removed no member of the class can take part in any of the college activities.

As a result of this action of the faculty, Earl S. Thompson, the manager of the Bowdoin Musical Clubs, canceled the concerts scheduled for next week, as two of the first tenors, two second basses, the leader, manager and two other players in the Mandolin Club and the 'cello soloist are members of the class.

The schedule of concerts included Thursday, Peabody, Mass.; Friday, Reading, Mass.; Saturday, Boston.

Punish Bates Class for 'Kidnaping' Four

LEWISTON, Me., March 21.—After completing an investigation into the recent "kidnaping" of four freshmen by sophomores, the Bates College faculty has placed half the members of the sophomore class on probation. The students affected are barred from participation in any college activities.

Concord Women in Rush to Register

Concord women are making a final rush today to register for the school committee balloting. "Polly" White heads a working girls' division, which has borrowed autos to help the work for Mrs. Victoria Wood's school committee ticket. Staid Concord citizens are minding babies so the women can have a chance to get out and register.

When it was found there were not enough registration blanks, a number of girls working for Mrs. Wood rushed to their typewriters and made carbon copies by the score.

Asks for 2 1-2 Cent Rate on the B. & M.

CONCORD, N. H., March 21.—That the Boston & Maine is planning for a uniform passenger rate of two and one-half cents a mile for the purpose of securing an increase of its revenues, was stated today by Edgar J. Rich, general solicitor for the company, at a hearing before the New Hampshire Public Service Commission.

Charge Rogers with Fraud on Cripples

NEW YORK, March 21.—H. H. Rogers, Jr., was censured in the Supreme Court today in an opinion in a suit brought by him against the Messiah Home for Crippled Children. Rogers claimed a mortgage of $600,000. The Home contends the elder Rogers gave the property outright. There is no other way of characterizing the process than as a fraud on the defendant (the Home)," the Court held.

Famous For Her Hair

Actress Tells How She Grew It.

Madame Rose, the well-known actress who played on one of the leading vaudeville circuits the past winter and who is especially noted for her long, beautiful hair, in a recent interview in Chicago, made the following statement: "Any lady or gentleman can promote a fine growth of their hair and make it soft and glossy with this simple recipe, which they can mix at home. To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the scalp two or three times a week with the finger tips. This is not only the finest hair grower I have ever known but it prevents the hair from falling out, removes dandruff and scalp humors, darkens streaked, faded gray hair and makes it soft and glossy. The ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost."

HISTORY OF HOME RULE BILL THAT CAUSED ULSTER REVOLT

LAST HOPE OF PEACE IN ASQUITH TENDER

The present difficulties in Ulster have been precipitated by Premier Asquith's insistence on the home rule bill, and by the compromise which he offered in a long-awaited address to the Commons a few days ago.

This compromise offer was, in brief: "A referendum in Ulster on the home rule bill, and if the vote is against the bill—six years' freedom for Ulster from its provisions."

John Redmond, the great Irish leader who has fought all his life for home rule, said he reluctantly accepted this compromise.

PASSAGE OF BILL MEANS LAW.

If the House of Commons passes the home rule bill this year it becomes law. The House of Lords will reject it; but the English law is that if the Commons passes a bill in each of three successive Parliaments, it becomes law. The bill has been twice passed.

Premier Asquith, in the face of the desperate opposition of the Ulstermen, delayed for weeks the final attempt to push through the home rule bill. Ulster threatened rebellion; and proceeded to drill troops of volunteers to support the threat. After many cabinet conferences, Asquith and his advisers determined upon a compromise offer.

This offer was announced to come on a certain day, and was awaited with the utmost expectation, although the Ulster men violently refused to accept it. The compromise finally offered contained the following provisions:

THE COMPROMISE OFFER.

1—The counties of Ulster province will be allowed to say whether or not they desire to be excluded from the operation of the home rule for Ireland bill.

2—A poll to be taken of the parliamentary electors on the question before the home rule bill becomes operative.

3—If a majority favors exclusion, the county or counties wherein there has been such a decision will be automatically excluded for a period of six years from the time of the first meeting of the new parliament.

4—If a majority of the Ulster counties favor exclusion, only the assent of a majority of the people of the whole United Kingdom can bring them under the sovereignty of the proposed Dublin parliament.

In his address Premier Asquith said:

"It appears that some form of exclusion for Ulster province must provide for a middle way between a surrender of principle on the part of the government and an application of force.

"Accordingly, it has been decided that the counties of Ulster shall first be allowed to say for themselves whether they desire exclusion.

"A poll will be taken of the Parliamentary electors on the exclusion question before the home rule bill becomes operative. If a majority favor exclusion in any county in Ulster, that county shall be automatically excluded from home rule for a period of six years from the date of the first assembling of the Dublin parliament.

PEOPLE MUST SAY.

"These proposals mean, of course, that all Ulster province shall have the option of exclusion, but the people themselves must voice their sentiment in the matter. If they favor exclusion they cannot be brought within the provisions of the home rule for Ireland bill except with the assent of a majority of people of the whole United Kingdom.

"The suggestion of home rule within home rule does not commend itself to any party," went on Mr. Asquith. "The proposition that the measure provide for Irish home rule with the option to the Ulster counties to remove themselves temporarily, was also opposed in the government counsels. It was finally decided to allow the people of Ulster to solve the question for themselves, thus relieving the government of the necessity of using force.

"The opinion among most of the conferees was that before the end of the six-year period of exclusion for the Ulster Unionists, a general election would be held throughout the British Isles for the purpose of voting on the question of whether or not the exclusion shall continue."

VAST CROWD LOOKS ON.

Not since the days of premiership of Gladstone had any parliamentary event been awaited with such interest as the announcement of Premier Asquith. In addition to the fever pitch interest in the government statement and the excitement occasioned by the possibility of violence upon the floor of the chamber, the police were instructed to use the utmost vigilance to prevent suffragettes from getting into the galleries. This caution led to a number of exciting incidents where detectives suspected the intentions of non-suffragettes who were entering with friends or relatives.

The historic chamber of the House of Commons was packed to suffocation.

The galleries were filled with men and women spectators, many of them being members of the peerage and representatives of foreign governments. Women attired in gowns of gorgeous color and members of the army and navy gave splashes of color to the spectators crowded beneath the sombre oaken roof beams.

In fact the throng was so dense and the chamber so crowded that some of the members were unable to get their seats. All the members and all the attaches of the law-making body, whose positions gave them entrance to the House of Commons, crowded their way into the chamber

GREAT CHEERS FOR ASQUITH.

When Premier Asquith entered the Liberals and Irish Nationalists leaped to their feet with prolonged cheers. Standing upon the benches the commoners shouted until they were hoarse. Looking neither to the right nor left, the Premier, his face solemn and tense beneath the fringe of iron gray hair, made his way slowly to his place.

Shortly afterwards, A. Bonar Law, leader of the opposition in the lower chamber, and Sir Edward Carson, chief Unionist leader in Ulster Province, entered.

The Unionist members then duplicated the tumult which had signalled the entrance of Mr. Asquith. The Speaker pounded with his gavel, but had to allow the uproar to run its course.

After several matters relating to the foreign affairs of the government had been settled, Premier Asquith arose amidst a thunderous burst of applause. It was some time before the statesman could make himself heard.

The preamble to the government statement was dry and uninteresting, not giving any hint as to the import of the announcement.

"If I make any suggestions in the course of my speech it is not because the government is running away from the original bill," said the Premier at the beginning.

"It is to allow consideration of this stage of the measure to begin with the greatest chances of success. There is every prospect of civil strife in Ulster Province, and yet if this bill is shipwrecked or permanently mutilated or even indefinitely postponed, there would be an equally formidable outlook."

CONVINCED BILL IS SOUND.

Despite opposition from Unionists in Ulster, Premier Asquith declared that the supporters of the home rule bill are still convinced of the soundness of the principle of its machinery.

"I consider a round table conference untenable, and any agreement reached in such a way would frustrate the object in view," said the Premier. Then he gave the terms of the compromise.

Mr. Law followed Premier Asquith with a speech which caused much concern.

"If the proposals presented by the government constitute the last word of the Cabinet, then their position is indeed very grave," said he.

"The Unionist party is opposed to home rule for Ireland with or without the exclusion clause."

Mr. Law declared that the proposals were unacceptable and that only general elections could solve the home rule problem.

"I do not like the Premier's proposals, but if the Unionists of Ulster accept them, the Irish Nationalists will do likewise," said he. "The proposals compromise the ultimate concession the government could make.

"When the vote occurs in Ulster, however, I am sure that there will be a big surprise. If the Ulster Unionists do not accept the government's concession, the Nationalists could not accept them. If the opposition refuses to accept the government plan, it is plainly the duty of Parliament to pass the home rule bill as it stands now."

William O'Brien, home ruler, described the proposals as "hateful" and "intolerable."

Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, got a noisy greeting when he arose to speak "for the north of Ireland." Hisses mingled with cheers.

"We shall reject the proposals unless the six-year limit is removed," said he. "Ulster would not accept a compromise which meant ultimate sentence of political death with a stay of execution for six years."

DESTROYER IN RECORD DASH TO IRISH PORT

KINGSTOWN, Ire., March 21.—After a wild dash across the Irish sea under a full head of steam the torpedo boat destroyer Drake arrived here this afternoon having established a record for speed on the trip from Southampton. She made the distance in nineteen and one-half hours. The Drake was under orders from the admiralty to proceed at full head of steam, showing the vigor which the government is pushing its war preparations.

A big fleet of British war ships is getting ready here for maneuvers in northern waters.

Troop Movements to Meet the Crisis in Ulster

Here are the movements of government troops to meet any possible contingency in Ulster:

Two regiments reinforce Ulster garrisons.

Ulster troops all shifted to new stations.

Recruits from Armagh to England.

Duke of Cromwell's Light Infantry from Curragh to Newry and Dundalk.

Cheshire Regiment to Enniskillen.

Troops from Mullingar and Athlone to Omagh and Enniskillen.

Training ships Royal Arthur and Gibraltar, and destroyers Pathfinder and Attentive picking up troops at Kingstown Harbor, seven miles from Dublin.

Warships from Bantry Bay to Kingstown Harbor.

Dorsetshire Regiment from Belfast to Holyhood.

Bedfordshire Regiment from Mullingar to Belfast.

Fourth Hussars and Sixteenth Lancers at Curragh armed with carbines instead of lances and swords.

Thumbnail Sketches of Leaders on Both Sides in Irish Crisis

PREMIER ASQUITH has been a power in British politics for years. Shortly after the great Liberal success of nine years ago he rose to second place in Campbell-Bannerman's cabinet, succeeding to the premiership on this leader's death.

His distinguishing characteristic has always been his pertinacity. He fought the government on its Boer war policy; fought and fought against the almost unanimous condemnation of the people, till at last he found them with him. It is this quality of pertinacity that has driven the Home Rule bill through two parliaments and will drive it to success in this—the third.

ANDREW BONAR LAW, leader of the Unionist party in its opposition to Home Rule, succeeded to the leadership upon the retirement of Mr. Balfour. He is an able, constructive statesman—not so great a debater as Asquith, but with a wide knowledge of the affairs of government. He has steadfastly maintained that the Home Rule bill should not be enacted without the intervention of a popular election in which it is an issue.

JOHN REDMOND has been for years the preeminent figure in Irish politics. He is a lovable man, whose only enemies are political. He is an able debater, gifted with keen political sense and capable of striking a tremendous blow at the fitting time. When recent elections gave the Irish party the balance of power in Ireland, Redmond knew his chance for Home Rule had come, and he likewise knew that the veto of the House of Lords must first be abolished.

He led the fight for the law providing that three passages of any bill against the Lords' veto shall establish it as law. And when this law was passed he opened the present fight for Home Rule, and he and the Asquiter have stood shoulder to shoulder in the fight.

SIR EDWARD CARSON has been called "King Carson of Ulster." He is a Galway man and a fighter. He has been Solicitor-General for England and Ireland, and gives precedence to none in the legal profession. He is most at home in defending a losing cause. In debate across the floor of the Commons, he is unequalled in ferocity and force. He cares little for logical argument, but much for denunciation; and the tremendous force of the man is best shown in the fact that for years he has held a united Ulster party at his back. Incidentally, he is a lonely widowed man of sixty with a weak stomach and a soft heart for his beloved children.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR ARTHUR FITZROY PAGET, who is in military command of the Ulster volunteers, is a retired officer of the British army. He has served with distinction in the past, has wide knowledge of military methods, is an expert campaigner and a strategist of mark.

IRISH RESERVES RESPONDING TO CALL TO COLORS

DUBLIN, March 21.—Mobilization of the Irish reservists was begun by the War Office today, this being the latest move in the government's campaign to hurl a great army into Ulster province.

The reservists are ordered to report at once to the colors for active service. Throughout the south the reserve troops were equipped and ordered held in readiness for transportation to the north of Ireland. The war officials declared that there were few failures on the part of the reservists to answer the call to arms.

The military authorities here admitted that a number of offices in the imperial army are resigning because they have ordered into Ulster for field service.

It was reported that more than 200 had wired their resignation to the War Office within the past twenty-four hours. Unionists in Ulster province are sending telegraphic appeals to relatives among the army officers to resign.

"If it comes to war do not let it be brother against brother," is the appeal of the Unionists.

Several troop trains carrying infantry, artillery and commissary supplies left Edenderry during the morning for various points on the Ulster border. From fifteen to thirty rounds of ammunition was doled out to each soldier.

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH LIVER

No headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out tonight and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret tonight straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken.

A Series of Little Talks to Readers

An Evangel of Beauty Is Advertising

UNTIL Gutenberg invented the printing press, books, paintings and other articles that stimulate the imagination and quicken our love for the beautiful were confined to royalty and the professional classes.

As the growth of intelligence kept pace with the progress of the printing art the mass of the people became ambitious and broke through the limitations of primitive conditions.

Now books, paintings, and those creations of the intellect which were once enjoyed by the privileged few are found in so many homes, we sometimes forget that it is to publicity, or advertising, that we owe this change in conditions. Advertising is the evangel of beauty. Just as sap, rising with the coming of April showers and warm sunlight, bursts the buds and makes a tree grow into its greatest beauty, so advertising liberates from the narrowness of a monotonous life.

You encourage advertising by patronizing advertisers, and at the same time you learn to live better at less expense. Why not make an even more careful study of the advertisements in this issue of the American—in every issue of the American? The advantage to you is undeniable.

KING JOINS MINISTRY IN EFFORT TO CRUSH REVOLT IN BELFAST

GRAVITY OF CRISIS STAGGERS BRITAIN

LONDON, March 21.—That the Ulster situation is exceedingly grave is exemplified by yesterday's developments.

Hardly had Sir Edward Carson arrived in Belfast when troops were moving from the centre of Ireland to strategic points in the North. Ball cartridges and ammunition were served out, the motor transport service was called up and troops, embarked at Kingstown, arrived aboard two cruisers in Dublin Bay.

These are some of the significant happenings of the day.

That the government is deeply concerned is very evident from the fact that Mr. Asquith had a long conference, ending just before midnight, with Mr. Winston Churchill, Colonel Seely and the heads of staff. On leaving, Mr. Winston Churchill immediately summoned the First Sea Lord, Prince Louis of Battenberg, to a conference at Admiralty House affecting the action of the royal navy.

Perhaps the most sensational news of the day, however, was that, following an order from the War Office to the officers in the Curragh camp, that if any of them were unprepared to undertake military service in Ulster they could resign and they would be dismissed from the service with forfeiture of pension, more than a hundred, most of them cavalry officers, actually tendered their resignations, but there was a fair sprinkling of infantry also.

ULTIMATUM TO TROOPS.

When inquiry was made at the War Office concerning the report that a hundred army officers in the Curragh camp had resigned rather than serve in Ulster, War Secretary Seely's secretary admitted that similar rumors had reached the War Office and that appropriate measures would be taken to deal with the situation.

It was impossible to obtain confirmation of the report that the War Office actually sent a kind of ultimatum to the Curragh regiments, but it appears certain that some officers resigned as a protest against being ordered to Ulster.

The regiments involved at Curragh are cavalry regiments with famous records, namely the Fourth Hussars, with "Balaklava" inscribed on their standard; the Fifth Lancers, who defended Ladysmith, and the Sixteenth Lancers, whose records include the battle of Waterloo.

Brigadier General Count Gleichen, commander of the troops in Belfast, has been summoned to London to confer with the War Office officials. The number of troops now in Ireland is 24,000.

Meanwhile Sir Edward Carson has issued a pressing appeal for calm and Mr. John Redmond is imploring the Nationalists to cancel their parade at Londonderry tomorrow.

FULL OF DANGER.

The following extracts give the views of London newspapers on the situation:

The Daily News—"By moving a sufficient number of troops into Ulster at once the government has taken the best step now possible to secure that there shall be no riot or outbreak."

The Morning Post—"The situation is full of danger, not chiefly of direct collision between the troops and the volunteers but of a conflict between astonished and overgenerous."

The Standard—"The emergency unveils of the War Office and the city constable of troops seem to show that the Ministers at last are gaining to realize the danger they have provoked."

The Daily Express—"It is at last impossible to believe that any tension still exists can contemplate the prospect of bloodshed in the cause of religious and civic execution."

The Daily Mail—"Judging from reports of the resignations of officers, it seems likely that the government may have some difficulty in forcing these gentlemen to do dirty work."

The Daily Telegraph—"No one living in these islands certainly has ever seen or even dreamed of such a condition of things as exists today in the North of Ireland."

The Times—"The situation appears to be immediately threatening today in spite of many sensational stories. Rumors of drastic action on the part of the government are sure to abound, but mere ad experience will not pay so much attention to them. The movement of troops in Ireland is no doubt precautionary, but it is not intentionally provocative or menacing, nor is that of the Ulster volunteers."

SHIFTING OF TROOPS.

"War in Ulster" is the startling headline which the sensational London newspapers are displaying in the blackest type.

The government began yesterday to dispose of its regular troops in Ireland, so that they may be in a position to deal with any situation that arises. The cooler men among the loyalists and Ulster unionists, however, believe that nothing resembling war is yet in sight.

The army council some time ago considered the possibilities of Home Rule strife and instructed Lieutenant General Sir Arthur Henry Fitzroy Paget, who commands the Irish garrisons, to take all necessary precautions to maintain order and safeguard property. A general redistribution of the forces in Ireland, therefore, was begun yesterday.

Two regiments were sent from the south to reinforce the Ulster garrisons, while the troops in Ulster were moved to new stations in conformity with the custom that in the event of hostilities or rioting soldiers should not be compelled to encounter people with whom they had formed friendships. In pursuance with the same rule Irish recruits were sent from the Armagh recruiting station to England.

MINISTERS ON THE SITUATION.

Four Cabinet Ministers spoke of the Ulster situation at different meetings last night. Mr. John Burns, president of the local government board, in an address on the occasion of the unveiling of his portrait in the National Liberal Club, said:—

"Home rule is a question mainly for Ireland itself. Three-fourths of the people there have demanded it persistently for years and we have no right to listen to the demand for more concessions or yield to clamor. We have no more desire to yield to lawless lawyers than to lawless laborers."

Mr. Thomas McKinnon Wood, Secretary of State for Scotland, said:—"We will carry home rule by agreement if we possibly can, but we will do it if we must."

Mr. Augustin Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in his speech declared that the government's proposals gave to Ulster freedom from coercion for six years and that the schemes of Mr. Andrew Bonar Law, the leader of the opposition in Parliament, meant immediate coercion if a referendum went against Ulster.

Sir John Alsebrook Simon, Attorney-General, said the government purposed to go steadily on, adding "Whatever happens, we will see that law and order are unflinchingly observed in Ulster."

STRENGTH OF THE ULSTER MEN.

In view of the partisan assertions regarding the number of men, the organization and equipment of the Ulster volunteers, statements of Colonel Doacort, military correspondent of the London Times, and Mr. H. W. Nevinson, a prominent Liberal writer on the nation, who have been touring Ulster, are important.

Colonel Dacort says the 110,000 men enrolled are in the flower of their age and of excellent physique. Decentralization has been the system of organization. Each county forms a separate unit. There are sixty-five battalions, of which there are eighteen in Belfast. The volunteers have four hundred automobiles, two hundred motorcycles and a complete system of communication with flags, lamps and heliographs. Eighty thousand rifles, according to Colonel Dacort, have been distributed in barracks, each containing five, to selected men, so that wholesale seizure of the weapons would be impossible.

Mr. Nevinson estimates that between 60,000 and 80,000 men would respond to a call for the mobilization of the volunteers. He thinks the rifles of the volunteers obsolete and of several different patterns, and that ammunition is scarce.

"In scattered groups," continued Mr. Nevinson, "they would try to harass the regular army sent to occupy the country. The movement, therefore, is not a bluff proper. Neither is it formidable, from a military point of view. The intention is serious, though fantastic, and it is formidable because no one wants to shoot his own people."

ENGLAND POURS SOLDIERS INTO ANTRIM COUNTY

told: "The government is ready for war, if war must come."

The conference with Lord Roberts was taken as indicating a possibility that the use of war he might be asked to take command. He is retired from service; but at the call would respond with all his energies and his amazing strategical genius. Field Marshal Sir John French is now in command of the government forces.

"DEMOCRACY IS MENACED."

All England rang today with echoes from the speech of David Lloyd-George, the Chancellor. At Huddersfield he declared: . . . . .

"The issue at stake in the present crisis are the most important since the reign of the Stuarts. Great Britain's democratic government is menaced; and a stern and strong hand must preserve order in Ulster.

"The government is determined to meet defiance of popular liberties resolutely and unswervingly, whatever the hazard may be."

It is generally believed this speech is an inspired utterance, and it is given all the force it would have coming from Premier Asquith himself.

With the government ready for war, the garrisons reinforced, new troops rushed to supplement the regular strength, and every local garrison shifted to strange ground where there will be no call for it to fire on friendly faces if the worst comes; the Ulster men likewise declared they were ready. One hundred thousand volunteers, they asserted, will spring to answer the call from Sir Edward Carson.

MOBILIZING THE RESERVES.

Troop trains passing through Edenberry were served with thirty rounds of ammunition per man. In Dublin, mobilization of the Irish reserves was begun. The torpedo boat destroyer Drake is at Kingstown after a dash across from Southampton. Gunboats, destroyers and transports are arriving almost hourly along the Irish coast. It was reported at the House of Commons that the channel squadron might be sent to Belfast.

The Government measures have been of three kinds: Recruits and men whose loyalty might be doubtful have been removed from Ulster to England, or to other provinces of Ireland. Troops from England have been rushed north to take their places. And the warships have been ordered to gather. Forty to fifty rounds of ammunition have been served out to each man.

Ulster men today rejoiced at word that 200 officers of the Curragh regiments had resigned rather than face the possibility of being sent against their countrymen. The War Office here denied that disaffection had grown to such proportions, but admitted that there had been resignations.

GRAVE CONDITION.

The gravity of the situation was increased today with word that the appeal of John Redmond that the Home Rule demonstration planned for Londonderry tomorrow be cancelled had been denied. Ulster men declared today that the parade would be held; and that "patriotic" riots would be made. Thereupon orders were given to increase the Royal Constabulary's effective force, and soldiers will guard every street. It is feared the demonstration may be a spark that will set alight the fires of civil war.

Company after company of British soldiers are pouring hourly into the heart of the revolting counties. Sir Edward Carson's couriers are dashing from town to town calling upon the Irish volunteers to prepare for immediate mobilization and the opening of hostilities. The hope of the Protestant leaders has been that if actual hostilities break out the British army would be split and regulars would join the Unionist forces.

WARSHIPS AT BELFAST.

Two torpedo boat destroyers, carrying men, reached Belfast Lough from Dublin, at daylight and landed 150 soldiers at Carrickfergus Castle. Troops are being hurried northward from the southern garrisons in batches of 100 to 500. All are equipped for active service.

The firing of two rockets over the headquarters of the provisional government in Belfast is the signal decided upon to call from 50,000 to 100,000 Ulster men to arms, the AMERICAN is reliably informed.

Some estimates of the number of picked men who are awaiting the word of Sir Edward Carson, who has taken command of the Ulster forces place it as high as 150,000.

A cordon of English troops is being drawn about the County of Ulster. Machine guns are part of their equipment.

Ulster's Strength in the Event of Civil War

Here are two estimates of the strength of Ulster's volunteer forces, which in the event of war would be mobilized against the forces of the government:

Colonel Dacourt, military correspondent of the London Times, estimates the forces at:

110,000 enrolled men in prime health and condition.
Organized by counties.
65 battalions—18 in Belfast.
100 motor cars.
200 motorcycles.
Complete equipment of flags, lamps and helios for signaling.
80,000 rifles, distributed in packages of five and secreted.

A somewhat conflicting estimate is that of H. W. Nevinson, a Liberal writer, who expects:

60,000 to 80,000 men to men to mobilize.
Rifles obsolete, of differing patterns.
Ammunition scarce.

STIRRING ACTIVITY IN WAR OFFICES

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

LONDON, March 21.—All the machinery of the British government was set in motion today to curb the revolutionary spirit of Ulster. Officials of the army and navy were in frequent consultation. The activity in both branches of the government service was as marked as that which was seen in the stirring days of the Boer war.

King George himself took a hand in the situation. He summoned Colonel J. E. B. Seeley, Secretary of War, for a conference that lasted more than two hours. News of the summons caused the circulation of a report that the sovereign had assumed the role of peace-maker, but when Secretary Seeley returned to the War Office the preparations for strengthening the government forces in Ulster went on with redoubled vigor.

ARMY AND NAVY CO-OPERATE.

During the forenoon Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, hurried to the War Office in response to a message from Seeley, and the two conferred for some time. Orders later issued to the naval officials showed that Seeley and Churchill were co-operating with the army and navy to curb Ulster.

Officials of the War Office secured little sleep during the night. One three went to their homes. The remainder snatched a few moments rest on couches whenever it was possible. It was admitted there that the situation in Ireland was serious.

Rumors that more than one hundred officers in the south of Ireland had resigned rather than obey orders to take the field against the people of Ulster caused alarm. That this would happen had been predicted by A. Bonar Law, the Unionist leader in his attack on Premier Asquith on the Home Rule fight in Parliament, but the chief officers of the War Department had refused to credit Law's statement.

A dispatch was sent Lieutenant-General Sir Arthur Henry Fitzroy Paget, commander-in-chief of the Irish garrisons, to report at once on the situation at Curragh, where it was reported that most of the officers had resigned.

He has given instructions to deal with the recalcitrant officers as he sees fit.

"The Perils of Pauline," the enthralling motion-picture novel now running in the Sunday American and you may share in the prizes offered by the Sunday American and the other Hearst Sunday newspapers.

WHAT DID THE MUMMY SAY?

That was the mystery question last Sunday. Winners of the mummy prizes will be published in the Sunday American one week from tomorrow.

Tomorrow's Mystery Question

It was whispered by Hicks, the Rascal, to Raymond Owen, secretary to the father of the beautiful Pauline

WHAT DID HICKS SAY?

One thousand dollars is offered as above stated, for the best explanations of WHAT HICKS SAID

MISS PEARL WHITE the Pauline of the Story.

How the Famous Pathe Players Have Put "Pauline" Into Marvellous Moving Pictures

N the great Pathe studio in Jersey City, the home of the famous Pathe moving pictures, every episode and incident of "The Perils of Pauline" is being done in real life by special arrangements with the Electric Film Co.

The attractive and beautiful Pauline Marvin of the novel lives and moves through the various episodes in the person of the charming Miss Pearl White. This vivacious, delightful and accomplished actress is well known all over the world through the Pathe pictures—an ideal Pauline. Graceful in the soft tennis flannels of the opening scenes of the photo-play, attractive in evening gowns, fascinatingly muffled in furs, she adorns the exquisite gowns which have been specially made for her by Lady Duff-Gordon, the greatest living artist in dressmaking. No wonder Harry is desperately in love with her. Harry Marvin is not her brother, for Pauline was adopted by the Marvins.

It is Mr. Crane Wilbur who takes the part of Harry. He is exactly the wholesome, straightforward, high-minded and lovable chap the story calls for. He has lived in the house with his charming adopted sister and has learned to worship even the ground she walks on. It is lucky for Pauline, as it turns out, that she has so fearless and resourceful a lover to depend upon in times of peril.

One human being stands between Harry and Pauline. Raymond Owen is a rascal of more than ordinary ingenuity and persistence. Such new and ingenious and unexpected and unthought of villainy as Owen resorts to could not be portrayed by a less skilled actor than Mr. Paul Panzer.

His face, at times, reflects gleams of wickedness which freeze the blood and make the observer shudder and wonder if Harry Marvin can successfully protect the girl he adores from such an accomplished scoundrel.

These three famous Pathe players take the leading parts in the moving picture reproduction of Mr. Charles Goddard's powerful novel. Other parts are taken by several more of the Pathe artists. The scenes have been posed with painstaking care and the costumes of the ladies have been designed by Lady Duff-Gordon, the famous "Lucile."

MR. CRANE WILBUR.

HOW TO WIN THE PRIZES

Last Sunday, when you read the first instalment of "The Perils of Pauline," you noticed that a message was whispered by a mummy. One thousand dollars in money prizes were offered last Sunday for the best answers sent in this week explaining the mummy's message. You will find the names of the prize winners of the mummy prizes in the Sunday American March 29.

Now for tomorrow's prize offer.

As you read the second instalment of "The Perils of Pauline" printed in tomorrow's Sunday American you will notice that a message was whispered by Hicks, the rascal, to Raymond Owen—WHAT DID HICKS SAY?

The words he spoke have not yet been written. That will be YOUR task. Read the instalment, study the situations and write the "message" that you think best fits those situations.

One thousand dollars in money prizes will be given for the best explanations of what Hicks said. Answers must reach this office not later than next Thursday noon. Announcement of winners will be made two weeks from Sunday.

Awards will be made according to the merits of the replies received, and those showing the greatest excellence in ingenuity, imagination, inventiveness and literary skill will be ranked in the order of merit.

Write your explanation in not over 200 words, write your name and address plainly and send it to

THE PERILS OF PAULINE,
P. O. Box 3047, Boston.

Every week $1,000.00 in cash prizes will be given for the best explanations of some mystery which each week you will find in the story.

This contest is open to every one without restriction, and those who in our opinion send in the best answers in not more than 200 words will be awarded the prizes. No manuscripts will be returned.

Tomorrow—$1,000 for the best answers to "What Did Hicks Say?"

The Sunday after—another $1,000 for another mystery.

Every Sunday another mystery and another $1,000.

And in addition to the $1,000 given every week there will be given $5,000 in special prizes, to be announced later as the story progresses.

LATEST STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor

Stocks ranged lower at the close, covering operations diminishing and profits being taken for over Sunday. The New York market was active for a short session, transactions totalling nearly 1,000,000 shares. Markets on this side of the ocean were firm at the start, and gains were the rule for the first few minutes of trading. The tendency of most leaders was downward afterward.

One New York newspaper explanation of the bull movement which signalized the last hour of trading yesterday reads:

"The purveyors at the capital of news bearing upon the stock market have for ten days or more been sending a succession of dispatches to readers and sermons about the administration's policy toward business. Their sudden shift to a more optimistic view of the political outlook is construed in the financial district to mean that some important speculative interests had covered their short contracts and for the time being adopted the market's constructive side."

American stocks had ruled lower in London, although a few showed gains at the close. The Ulster situation affected other securities, but more demand for stocks was reported from the Continent, and sentiment in Paris had improved. The fact that International shares were below parity in London had no influence upon prices in New York.

YANKEE-RUSSKY BANK.

It is called Just St. Petersburg that financiers in the Russian capital are discussing the feasibility of establishing a joint American-Russian bank. "The idea," it is stated, "was first mooted two years ago, when the Anglo-Russian Bank began to take shape. The venture proved the wisdom of its promoters, and so successful has it been that it was quickly followed by a Franco-Russian bank on similar lines.

"The natural result has been that Americans, both those living in and those traveling about Russia, want to have an American edition of the same thing. Negotiations are now nearing completion and the bank is already an accomplished fact.

"Hailing from several of the leading banks in New York city, the committee, and H. Hark's (the new Finance Minister) friendly efforts may be considered founded on as he is thoroughly American in his sympathies."

FIGHTING STANDARD OIL.

It has been admitted in a letter to the Stock which serves as an American board of trade in Berlin that the German government is discriminating against Standard Oil. The letter emerges from the Ministry of War in reply to a protest from Americans. When it comes to buying supplies for the German army and navy produced by the Standard Oil and subsidiary companies will not be considered at all. "A rumor is current," says a cablegram to a New York newspaper, "that the American Pure Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company may change the registration of their tank steamers flying from German to the American flag if an attempt is made under the provisions of the pending monopoly bill to compel them to sell their liners."

STEEL TRADE QUIET.

The steel trade continues quiet and there is fear that unless new business is soon received curtailment of operations in almost all mills will be necessary. Manufacturers have tried hard to invite business by making price concessions, especially as regards bars and plates. But so far in Pittsburgh certainment has not taken place recently, plants there now being operated on a basis of from 70 to 75 per cent. of capacity. There is very little demand for pig iron at present. The steel trade is looking forward to a dull Spring and Summer, unless increased freight rates or some other favorable development. Pull railroads to place large equipment orders.

FINANCIAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

For 1913 Calumet & Arizona net earnings amounted to $4,074,657, or 6.59 a share, while production cost per pound was 7.04 cents, compared with 7.02 for the previous year.

The new Merchants Exchange building (No. 28 State street, will be open for inspection on March 25.

OPEN NEW LINE OF STEAMSHIPS IN BEEF WAR

News of the combination of a number of Boston wholesale meat dealers to fight the American Beef Trust leaked out today, despite the secrecy of the firms engaged, with the announcement that the steamship Banffshire, of the Federal Steam Navigation Company of London, cleared from Brisbane and Melbourne, Australia, her refrigerators packed with chilled beef for Boston.

The Banffshire, which will take nearly fifty days in passage, by the way of the Cape of Good Hope, will start a monthly service for Boston merchants, in fear the trust would discover their plans, engaged the London shipping firm to supply this service.

In the service are eight 7,000-ton refrigerator steamers, each with from four to six refrigerators of a capacity in each refrigerator of eighteen carloads of carcass. Two other boats are 11,000-ton capacity. The fleet is made up of the Banffshire, Devon, Durham, Essex, Kent, Somerset, Surrey and Sussex, of 7,000 tons each, and the Shropshire and Wiltshire of 11,000 each.

The negotiations have been going on secretly for many months. The names of the Boston firms are still kept secret for fear of the active installation of the beef trust, from which the combining firms are still receiving shipments of the supply to beef.

With the regular supply of from seventy-five to one hundred carloads of Australian beef every month, duty free under the new tariff, it is expected that the Beef Trust will be unable to control beef prices in Boston. Although the supply will not be enough to accommodate Boston, it will form a large enough part of the supply to determine prices.

The contract with the London shipping company will also inaugurate Boston's first direct passenger and freight service to South Africa and Australia. Each of the ships of the fleet is built with passenger accommodations. Besides the refrigerators, the holds of the steamers will permit the carrying of other freight.

Dr. Shaw Taunts U.S. Men in Mexico Issue

NEW YORK, March 21.—"If men are so brave and superior, why don't they go down to Mexico and recover the rights of the downtrodden Mexicans?" asked Dr. Anna H. Shaw in a suffrage meeting at Erasmus Hall High School today. She put her query after saying one of the main arguments against woman suffrage was that women lacked fighting intellect.

Gov. Glynn Urges Calling Convention

ALBANY, N. Y., March 21.—For the purpose of planning for the "uplifting" of the party and to discuss the question of getting out the vote on April 7, when the question of holding a constitutional convention in 1915 will be voted on, the Democratic State Committee met here today. Governor Glynn, William Church Osborn, the newly-elected chairman, and other up-State leaders took part in the discussion. Governor Glynn urged the necessity of a constitutional convention without delay.

Policeman Hero at New York Fire

NEW YORK, March 21.—Heroic rescues marked two fires in Greater New York today. Risking his life repeatedly, Policeman O'Connell of the 42d West Forty-eighth street station saved nine lives in a fire in the residence of C. E. Byrne, a wealthy piano manufacturer, at No. 32 West Seventy-second street before he himself was overcome by smoke. O'Connell was carried out unconscious after he had rescued all the persons in the building.

SCHOOLBOY ATHLETES TO CLASH IN FINALS TODAY OF GREAT ANNUAL MEET

WALTER CAMP TELLS HOW STAR COLLEGE ATHLETES SUCCEED IN BUSINESS

WALTER CAMP'S COLUMN

THE QUARTERBACK'S RUN!

Blood on his headgear and mud on his shoulder,
Crouches he there, the signal to give;
Counts the tall backs—his play is the bolder,
Takes the long chance—the end's like a sieve!
Almost they reach him, he turns past the corner,
Tackle is blocked and end caught in the trap,
Pace may he squeeze on, of tackles a scorner,
Shoots he along discouraging mishap!

Blood on his headgear and mud on his shoulder,
Comes he now flying, the goal line draws near,
Stands there the fullback, a ill tense, while the holder,
Catches his breath for the shock he must bear,
Shifts the ball quickly, one arm is unbended,
Now strikes he straight on the fullback to toss.
A crash as they meet, and the fullback's extended
Flat on the turf and our quarter's across!

NEW COACH FOR VIRGINIA.

Those who will face the Virginia football team next Fall, Vanderbilt, North Carolina and, at the least, Yale, will be especially interested in the final selection of football coach at that institution. Captain Woodbridge and his advisors have determined upon Joe Wood, the former centre, who was last year a teacher and coach of a school team—Episcopal High—near Alexandria. Although not a heavy man, he was a good centre and made his mark on the football fields of the South Atlantic. He will have considerable new talent to work on but a lack of veteran players.

ATHLETES PROMINENT IN OFFICE.

Johnnie de Saulles is offered post as minister to Uruguay; Good for President Wilson! This young man has made a power of himself in business and civic interests since graduation, as active, capable and successful as he was on the gridiron and diamond while in college. It is not a rather striking comment upon the recent criticism resurrected as to the effect of athletics on morals that all these men should be chosen for positions of prominence and trust? Only to mention a few:

Henry Thornton, the old Penn football player, is general manager of the Great Eastern Railroad system of England. Then two old Yale captains—Lee McClung, treasurer of the United States; Vance McCormick, Mayor of Harrisburg and next running for Governor of the State and a member of the Yale corporation. E. K. Hall, a Dartmouth player, vice-president New England Telephone Company; Cameron Forbes, Harvard football coach, Governor of the Philippines.

Some day this column will comment upon the later life of many of the graduates of our schools and colleges and the type athletics is likely to develop.

SOCCER FOOTBALL MAKES A HIT.

Once more the American has taken up a game from the Englishman, and has found occasion to alter the rules in very material fashion. This time it is soccer football. Much has been said that will be remembered in columns of papers about the advantage of the sportsmanlike rule, "There shall be no wrangling disputes." When a man is injured his team goes on and plays one man short.

Our country has been playing soccer now for a few years and at the official meeting of the Intercollegiate Association this year they have decided to sanction the use of substitutes. The possible substitutes are two in number, one a regular reserve, and another who is to be allowed in the game only in case of injury to any member of the regular team.

Another excellent provision was added that the game may be prolonged by periods of ten minutes in case of a tie at the discretion of the captains.

Soccer is growing in this country, not very much in the matter of interest, for spectators are few, but in real amusement for the players themselves, and there is no reason why it should not come to fill a place alongside our other sports without in any way trespassing or creating a rivalry.

MORE TROUBLE FROM WASHINGTON & JEFFERSON.

The opponents of Washington & Jefferson will have another chill when they hear that John Spiegel, the wonderful halfback, has a brother, William, who hails from Detroit, and who proposes to enter the football ranks of Washington & Jefferson next Fall.

Stories come from Detroit that William is faster even than John, and also plays halfback. As if reminding filled that other halfback position regularly on the Washington & Jefferson team last Fall, and to the entire satisfaction of his own side, as well as to the discomfiture of the opponents, it is more than likely that William will go out on the end.

Yale, take notice! The name at New Haven next Fall is going to be a hard one, indeed. Just to show that John has not lost his speed, he ran in the Y. M. C. A. games at the Duquesne Garden February 21, winning the sixty-yard dash from Burwell in 6 3-5s., just beating him out at the tape.

HARVARD CREW STILL FAULTY ON THE CATCH

By E. W. SOUCY.

(Member Harvard Rowing Squad.)

The rowing conditions were no better than Thursday and only three crews left the Newell boathouse for their daily row. Coach Wray did not get out on the river, but remained indoors and coached the freshmen.

As it was pretty cold, we all dressed warmly. Again we learned the use of a good, hard leg drive, and the way that the oarsmen dug through the waves showed that every one was using his legs to the utmost, but at the same time we were learning this leg drive we also were forgetting to get a hard catch.

Coach Wray noticed this from the float as we passed by; nevertheless, this fault will be corrected quickly enough when he gets down to rowing in earnest. It seems that when the coach is not following the crews some of the men get lazy, and thereby fall into many bad faults.

The first two varsity crews rowed four miles and followed this with a short run. Captain Reynolds plans to have rowing on Saturday, Sunday after, beginning today. This is rather early in the season to start rowing on Saturday, but Captain Reynolds figures that we will need all the practice that we can get for the race with the Navy crews on April 25.

There were no shifts in any of the crews. The freshmen worked out rather well in the tank, and Coach Wray seemed pleased with the results of his shift made Thursday.

One of the big men in the second varsity boat is K. G. B. Parsons, '16. He is rowing at No. 6. He weighs 192 pounds and handles his oar with a vim. It would not be at all surprising to see him go up in the first eight in the near future.

TRAINING CAMP DOINGS

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 21.—The Dodgers will get a real practice game this afternoon when they clash with Newark, champions of the International League.

HOUSTON, Tex., March 21.—That Manager Chance will not stand for any infractions of training rules, was evident when he fined Pitcher Vaughn $100. It was the second time the latter was "walled" in the same manner. The Cubs will start their homeward journey today.

MARLIN, Tex., March 21.—Manager McGraw and several of the regulars are hitting the ball in practice games, but the pitchers are not showing up well. Only one game today, but two tomorrow, when the Giants play an exhibition game at Temple.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., March 21.—The Senators will be in this city today and tomorrow, when they will play two games with the University of Virginia team. They return to Washington this evening.

GULFPORT, Miss., March 21.—Sam Crawford, star outfielder of the Detroit Tigers, batted out a home run on the Tigers' first training trip today. He will leave for Mobile and another to New Orleans this morning for work out games.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 21.—Manager Connie Mack and the regulars are hitting the ball hard, although the pitchers are not showing up well. Only one game today, when the Athletics play an exhibition game at Texarkana.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 21.—The Cubs were greeted by the first cold wave, rainy and disagreeable weather on the opening day of their training camp. When Manager Frank Chance arrived at the training camp it was announced that today it would warmed up to-morrow, this afternoon there would be an exhibition game today.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 21.—Leon Cadore, the $10,000 left fielder of the White Sox, has been signed up with the Portland team of the coast league. Jack Fleet Walker, who was signed up by Portland, is also reported to have signed with the Seattle team, breaking in a new pair of shoes during training and he died coming home from the game.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 21.—Manager Herbert of the Browns today announced that he had signed Pitcher Joe Wood to the Nashville club of the Southern League. Wood will report to the Vols during the Spring training season.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 21.—Each player on the Cubs is now busily engaged. Players had his Cardinals out playing several innings today.

WILMINGTON, N. C., March 21.—The Phillies started in clash with Robins on the baseball diamond here yesterday and the game was called in the fifth inning on account of rain. Score, 3 to 0.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 21.—The first baseball game of the season was played here yesterday between the Athletics and Cincinnati Nationals. Score, 5 to 4.

TY COBB TELLS HOW BATTERS DEVELOP

Written for the BOSTON AMERICAN

By TY COBB.

The impression existed in baseball for a long time that a batter had to be born and that this branch of the game could not be learned.

I maintain that certain natural qualities must be born in a man to make him a good hitter and that with these he can develop himself into a formidable sticker.

I was not always a hard hitter, yet I have had pretty good luck at this end of the game for the past few seasons because I made a study of batting, deeming this to be the most valuable part of a player's work.

Nobody would expect a one-legged man to be a good infielder and to develop into an "Eddie" Collins or a "Hans" Wagner, because the missing leg would naturally be a big handicap. Since a bad eye is not so apparent, many managers and fans find fault with players with weak lamps because they cannot hit.

You would be surprised at the number of men playing ball in the big leagues who could not see a very high mark if they were to undergo an eye test, and who should be wearing glasses. Of course, none of them will admit it, because that would be a practical admission of weakness.

They Won't Listen To a Warning.

Many ball players strain their eyes by abusing them. They read in bed night while on the road or otherwise put them to a strain. With a few exceptions, it is almost impossible to get big leaguers to accept a word of warning because they believe their eyes are strong enough to stand any test or strain.

"Oh, you can't hurt my glims," protests the abuser.

Now I know that my own eyes are none too strong, and that they gave me a lot of trouble last season, and so I am the greatest little care taker of the lamps you ever met.

I insist on the light being good before I read, and I do very little of it on trains even when the shaking motion is not perceptible, a motion which realists have told me is a great strain on the eye.

For a long time "Fred" Merkle of the Giants was a voracious reader, and in the Winters he used to sit up until late in the nights studying the history of his books. This was his hobby. I have heard McGraw make the statement that by using his eyes so constantly Merkle had hurt his hitting.

"Merkle has strained his eyes from reading so much," declared McGraw to a bunch of us in the lobby of the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston one night during the world's series of 1912.

"I can tell by the way in which he misses the ball when he is at bat. It is easy to pick out the players with the bad eyes and I could tell you about a lot of them in the league who are getting away with it, but they would be hitting much harder if they would take care of their lamps. I believe that all Merkle's eyes need to restore them to their former healthy condition is a good rest."

Merkle's Eyes Have Improved.

The Giants' first baseman took McGraw's advice in the Winter after the 1912 season, so I am told, and he had a much better year in 1913. From what I can gather about the Giants-White Sox world's trip, Fred did a great lot of hitting on it and amazed several American Leaguers who were on the tour and had seen Merkle's hitting only when he was appearing in a world's series, or who were acquainted with it simply by the accounts they had read in the newspapers.

Sightseeing is not hard on the eyes, and Merkle applied his tongue to this sort of work all Winter during the world girdling trip. The evident result has been that his hitting has improved.

Many ball fans are great moving picture fans, but it is my belief that this sort of amusement hurts the eyes because of the flicker of the film. I know that I don't hit as well the day after I have gone to a "movie" show.

As I have said in one of my previous articles, many players use the moving pictures for an alibi.

Therefore, the first natural quality that a man needs to become a hitter is a good eye. After this comes a good, stout heart, for in hitting this is more necessary than infielding.

If the pitchers in a league find that a batter is afraid of the ball and backs off from it, they will keep popping them at his head right along until they scare him out of the box. And don't forget that every recruit who comes to the league undergoes this test.

After a good heart and good eye, comes the mind. A player must be a student of hitting, and he must have exceptional judgment in picking them out" to become a star. No player ever became a great batter by going after bad balls. Pitchers soon find this out and give him nothing else.

Concentration on the work in hand is the great thing in batting.

School Notes

BY VIRTUE OF ITS VICTORY OVER ENGlish High, the Mechanic High team is the undisputed school hockey champion team. Noaell, Rollins and Wannamaker were the star players.

WITH THE SECOND INSTALMENT OF the three-day handicap and dinghy meet over, the first class is second with 11 points and the second class third with 1 point at Roxbury Latin school.

THE JUNIORS WON THE ANNUAL IN-door interclass track meet of the Framingham High school on Saturday evening. The scores: Juniors 34, seniors 24, sophomores 20, freshmen 19 and freshmen last with 12.

STUDENTS OF THE WALTHAM HIGH school contributed to a large attended athletic exhibition in the school drill hall, one of the features being the tumbling of Howell Flavin, the 5-year-old son of Thomas Carey. Several wrestling bouts were also staged.

WARREN JOHNSON HAS BEEN RE-elected as captain of the Worcester High school ball team. A strong team is expected next season, Wells, Ward and Culver, two strong boys on this year's five, back.

ENGLISH HIGH'S RELAY TEAM THAT will run against Boston Latin today will be made up of Dargie, Dellicarne, Scott and Coughlan, the latter filling in for Captain McGrath.

THE WORCESTER ACADEMY ATHLETIC Association will hold its third annual interscholastic track meet June 13. The meet is open to high schools of New England, private and preparatory schools being barred.

GEORGE HEATH HAS BEEN ELECTED to captain the Worcester High hockey team for next Winter. He has played a strong game at point all season and is a star at basketball. Other players elected were Billy Cobb, Lloyd Goblin, Eli Smith, Harold Wendell, George Da Dratch, Kidder and Notley and Chesley Tolman.

FRANK MURRAY OF MAYNARD, WHO has been appointed as coach for the Worcester High school baseball team, will begin his work today. He will have been on April 1 and with his long experience should land his nine in the championship class. Among the players reporting, which includes twenty-five candidates, are Murphy, Washington, Milton, Natick and Weeks.

C. P. CURTIS has been named by the Boston Yacht Club as its defender in a match for the Quincy Challenge Cup this Summer. Two challenges have been announced, one from the Corinthian Yacht Club and the other from the South Boston Yacht Club.

DESHLER-EGAN BOUT SHOULD BE A SIZZLER

By RINGSIDE.

The main bout at the University A. C. in Cambridge next Tuesday, which has Dave Deshler, a native son, and Joe Egan of South Boston as principals, should be a mighty good drawing card. It should likewise be something in the line of a fight. Though Deshler has not shown in the ring for quite a time, he has been training consistently and seems fit to give a good account of himself.

* * *

Both boxers are of the rushing type and Deshler especially likes nothing better than close, heavy going all the time. He is cut somewhat along the lines of Bat Nelson and is willing to take a good hammering for the chance of putting across a few solid clouts. Egan is somewhat the clever-er of the pair, and the harder hitter, but likely to be worried by the boring tactics that the older fighter is certain to use.

* * *

The affair will mark Egan's first appearance in the lists as a welterweight. A short time ago this boxer decided that he was growing too big to try and make the lightweight limit, and accordingly did the shift. In his last two fights he has won deserved decisions from Young Jasper and Johnny Glover, and in his new class ought to be stronger than ever. He will scale 142 pounds ringside.

* * *

The preliminaries also should be well worth while as the boxers paired up are very evenly matched and have back scores to settle. Young Scanlon of Cambridge meets Larry Burns of Lawrence, Young Aronson of East Boston faces Finney Boyle of Lowell and Oscar Lloyd of Beverly boxes Joe Vargus of Cambridge.

* * *

It's mighty hard to see how Willie Ritchie can dodge Freddy Welsh any longer. The champion has had no liking for the little Welshman's game, since the time Freddy won a decision over him several years ago, and has kept out of his way. With his clean-cut victory over Rivers as a lever, Freddy can certainly force Ritchie William to come to terms. The bout looks good as a Fourth of July fixture out on the Coast.

* * *

Georges Carpentier faces about the toughest problem of his lucrative career when he swaps blows with Joe Jeanette in Paris tonight. If Jeanette can get a win over the French champion, he can bring the Champs Elysees or any other part of the town back on the back with him. Or, what would be more to his liking, he could stay in France and clean up enough money to make the winnings of Sam McVey look like a handful of pennies.

* * *

Here is the way a French paper describes what is coming off: "Herr will be, with two such stouthearted men, two boxers so agile, so clever, two combatants so fierce, that it will have not only a match of incomparable beauty, but also a battle incomparably exciting." Which is quite enough.

Tech and B.Y.M.C.U. Wrestlers Will Clash

Fast bouts are expected tonight when the "Tech" and B. Y. M. C. U. wrestling teams meet for the New England amateur championship.

The "Tech" team claims the New England college championship, because of wins over Harvard, Yale and Brown, with no defeats, and the Union team has several amateur class titles in the squad.

Two of the big bouts will be when O'Hara and Ryan go up against Kelly and Walkers of Tech, while Kelly nor O'Hara has been defeated in a long time.

The "Tech" entries will be: Leslie and Crowell, heavyweight; Godell and Walkers, 158 pounds; Tenan, 145; Kelly, Martin, Rounds and Burgess, 135; Means, 125, and Loo in the 115-pound class.

Brothers Star in Harvard Mat Bout

The feature bout of the wrestling championships at Harvard was that between Lothrop Withington of the Law School and his brother, Paul Withington of the Medical School in the heavyweight class. It was declared a draw after fifteen minutes of hard milling.

Tie in Billiard Play.

NEW YORK, March 21.—Morris D. Brown of Brooklyn and Edward W. Gardner of this city, two former champions, are tied for first place in the national amateur billiard championship, each having won five out of six games. They will play off the tie today.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

MACON, Ga., March 21—At 2:45 o'clock this morning Doc Gessler, manager of the Pittsburgh Federal League Club, sneaked out of town on a rattler bound for Lynchburg, Va., where his club is training.

He was in the mental terror of arrest up to a late hour last night on account of the injunction that had been secured by the Boston Club against all agents of the Federal League.

Doc is an old friend of mine and I looked him up at his hotel where he was hid in fear and trembling. He had come here to try to make several players under contract to the Boston Nationals jump their contracts and ally themselves with the Federal League.

But his movements had been anticipated and Stallings had secured an injunction preventing any agent of the Federal League from tampering with his players.

DOC'S LITTLE JOKE ACT.

The result was that old Doc was headed in his hotel den and served with papers. He went up in the air so far that he had hardly touched earth again when he left here.

The incident of Doc's arrival, his stay here and his departure was one of the funniest stunts that was ever pulled off in baseball. For Doc was about thirty pounds lighter than he did when he was playing right field for the Red Sox several years ago.

He needs a shortstop and a few other players and with that idea in view came to Macon. He arrived here Thursday night and put up at the Linkler House.

Registering under the name of Geo Empfield (a most curious name), he pulled the Weber and Fields fried eye hat he is wearing over his eyes and spent the evening at a picture show.

Next morning he tried to get into communication with some Boston players. He finally landed Hub Perdue, but Doc swears he wasn't trying to sign up the Squash, but simply trying to feel him out and learn what grade of money he was able to land for the Federal League.

PLOT NIPPED IN THE BUD.

Perdue was foxy and got Wilson Collins to go along with him to Doc's hotel as a witness. But Stallings had been tipped off in regard to the arrival of Gessler, so that Perdue and Collins were hardly in Doc's room before the Boston manager broke in on them with his lawyer and served Doc with injunction papers.

Doc collapsed completely when served with the papers and it was some time before he recovered his breath. Finally I got in touch with him and led him away in a dazed state.

He asked to be taken to a telegraph office, where, after several futile attempts to frame a dispatch to his Pittsburgh backers he turned the matter over to me and I sent a wire somewhat as follows

On arrive here I was served with papers enjoining me from even talking with any players. Papers strictly legal. Am afraid Stovall, but applied to any agent of Federal League. Am threatened with arrest and am therefore beating it back to Lynchburg.

After that Doc felt easier and proceeded to enjoy himself for the balance of the evening at being especially careful to keep away from anybody that looked like a Boston ball player.

STRONG LAWS ON LABOR.

Stallings, as I wired to the AMERICAN a day or two ago, had been fearing a raid on the part of the Federal Leaguers and had taken time by the forelock and secured a sweeping injunction against any agent of the "Outlaw" league tampering with his players.

Stovall was expected here, but did not show up, but the injunction held good when Doc Gessler arrived

It can be safely said that no more Feds will show up here while the Braves are in this State. The laws are very strict here regarding tampering with men under contract.

The laws were framed to protect the ball players against rough stuff and are of such liberal formation that a man is liable to be hung if he infringes them.

Stallings knew of these laws, being a prolific employer of native labor, so he was well primed for a Federal League invasion

BALL PLAYER COLLAPSES.

The Braves bucked against the second contest with the Newark International League champions by the score of 5 to 1, after seven innings of rather close playing.

The game was held up by the sudden collapse of G Smith, who was playing first base for Newark, caused by heat prostration.

It was some time before he recovered consciousness, and the incident took the "pep" out of the players on both teams.

Players and trainers from both squads rushed to his assistance and when they reached him the lad was unconscious.

He apparently had no pulse, and it was thought he was dead, and it was several minutes before he showed any signs of life.

Smith was removed to the hotel and bleed under the care of a physician.

The Boston Ball Teams Need a Battle Song

You Can Write It and Win $25 Prize Contest

Scores of baseball battle songs are coming in to the Contest Editor. The fans of New England are engaged in a battle of verse to help the Boston baseball teams and win a $25 prize. The songs contain enough enthusiasm to make a world's champion team. Have you sent in one? If not, try You may win the $25. And what's more, YOU may bring another world's series to Boston A few thousand strong-voiced fans, singing a swinging, spirited battle song, will win more games than Tris Speaker, Ty Cobb or Walter Johnson. A song, the Marseillaise, turned a French rabble into a force that swept aside organized armies. That song had a PUNCH. It beat on the heartstrings of the French peasant and made him a conqueror. Write your song with a PUNCH in it. The song with the most punch will win the $25. And the name of the winner may go down in baseball history as having helped a great team win a pennant. Write your battle song now. Mail it to the Baseball Song Contest Editor, the Boston AMERICAN, 50-52 Summer street, Boston

HENDRIX AFTER RED SOX STARS FOR HIS CLUB

By JACK CONRAD

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 21—Jack Hendrix, the reformed manager of the Indianapolis American Association Club, is an ambitious soul. Hendrix was formerly boss of the Denver club and won several pennants and is desirous of capturing the American Association flag with Indianapolis this year.

Indianapolis finished in last place in 1913, and Hendrix would like to strengthen his club by securing several of the star members of the Red Sox. Hendrix, it is reported, is willing to purchase Henriksen, Rogh or Scott.

The Indianapolis leader, however, does not want to part with any of his own players. He is unwilling to surrender Otto Mertz, the Giant right-handed pitcher, to the Red Sox, as he runs an idea Mertz will be a pretty handy youth for the Indianapolis ball club to wave on its payroll this year.

NO CHANCE FOR HENDRIX.

Bill Carrigan is not in baseball merely for the good of his health and has no idea of being a good fellow and building up the Indianapolis club. Consequently, Hendrix will have to struggle along without the services of Henriksen, Rogh or Scott.

In the humble opinion of the writer there is not a chance of either Henriksen or Rogh being let out of the American League.

If the Red Sox even did desire to trade either of these men, they would be obliged to get waivers on them and as three or several clubs which could use either Henriksen or Rogh to advantage, they would still stay in the big show.

FEDERALS AFTER SCOTT.

Scott is practically sure to remain with the Red Sox. He was the sensation of the American Association last season, and it would be a great feather in Hendrix' cap if he could land the little shortstop.

Scott, however, must be taken into consideration. If he is not retained by the Red Sox, he will refuse to go to a minor league, as he has a flattering offer to go to the Indianapolis Federal League Club.

The Indiana boy will not cast his lot with the outlaws unless Carrigan turns him adrift, which is his not any intention of doing at the present time.

There is still a lone Federal League scout in this fair town. His name is Maloy, and he once earned a livelihood by playing ball. Maloy dis guised himself as a recruit and secured a tryout with Indianapolis

BENEFIT GAME TODAY.

He was rooming with one of the Indianapolis players when a Boston newspaper informed Hendrix who Maloy was, and that noble gentleman was immediately given his marching orders

The Regulars and Yannigans will engage in a nine-inning practice game today for the benefit of St Mary's Catholic Church. At least six pitchers will be used in the contest, as Carrigan does not believe in overworking his mound artists so early in the season.

There was no practice game yesterday, on account of the cold. Instead the players went on a long "hike" through the Ozark Mountains,

NEWSIES OUT FOR 'HAPPY'S' BALL SQUAD

All out, "fans," to watch the newsboys practice on the Common!

That will be the call on Monday, April 6 The hour is 9:30 a. m

Hundreds of newsboys will be out for their Spring training—and not in a regular army of them, to judge from the applications which poured in today from "newsies" who want to play.

The arrangements are in charge of "Happy the Newsboys' King" So he has been the response to the plea that "Happy" is living up to his name with a smile that doesn't come off He is getting applications from here, there and everywhere. Undoubtedly there is going to be SOME baseball playing by those newsboys when they get going

NOBODY IS BARRED.

Not a newsboy in Greater Boston will be barred provided he is between ten and eighteen years of age In all about 4,500 are eligible—and if they all showed up for practice, there would be a possible 500 teams

There are to be four divisions and four stellar teams to be picked from the classes. The first will be the "peanuts," ten to twelve; then the "colts," twelve to fourteen; juniors, fourteen to sixteen; seniors, sixteen to eighteen

"I never saw anything like this enthusiasm among the newsies," says "Happy" "It shows the newsies are all keenly interested. We're going to have a whole Easter vacation of training and then when Summer comes, the boys will be in the pink of condition for real diamond work.

SEND 'EM IN EARLY.

"Let the boys send in their applications early—right away Now is the best time, because we are going to get under way on April 6 I wish the boys in filling out the application blanks to be sure to mention the district, like Dorchester, Roxbury and so on, in which they live Also let the boys bring out their caps This is something worth while It will give the boys exercise and fun, will expand their lungs and develop their muscles.

"Happy" says the newsies want to play to fill out the coupon blank and address it to "Happy," Circulation Department, American

SCHOOL STARS CLASH IN BIG MEET TODAY

Commerce and English High are the ruling favorites in the sixth annual Boston High School Track and Field League carnival, which is held today in the South Armory, Irvington street. As a result of the finals of some of the field events that took place Wednesday at the English High School drill hall, English High enters the meet with the greatest number of points, with the Commerce a close second

The 600-yard run, with Captain Brett of Dorchester and Captain Sutter of Commerce, will be the banner event of the afternoon

The 1,000-yard run is regarded as the next best event, with Niles of the English High and Murphy of Dorchester out for first honors

Silva of Dorchester should have little trouble in coping the mile with Commerce in the 300-yard run is expected to equal or shatter his record.

Wilson Says He Crosses Pitchers with His Bat

By GEORGE WILSON

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 21—I did fairly well, my average for the year being .975.

The baseball writers boomed me as a demon batter because I was able to clout for an average of .364 for the season. I bat left-handed against right-handed pitchers, while I bat right-handed when opposed by a southpaw. I seem to do my best work when batting left-handed. I throw right-handed

I am twenty-four years of age and should be at my best this year I scale 175 pounds and am 5 feet 10½ inches tall.

During the Winter I teach mathematics and coach the athletic teams at Reading High. I think athletics is a great thing for schoolboys. It develops them physically and makes them courageous and manly. There is not any place in sports for the weakling and the quitter.

I would rather play in Boston than in any other big league city. It is near my home, and I have numerous friends there. Boston is also the fairest baseball town in the country, and as a result a great place for the young ball player who is desirous of making good, and who always needs plenty of encouragement from the "fans" in order to guide him over the rough places that obstruct his path.

Before closing, I wish to state that I attended Boston College and that I played on the football eleven while in college.

I first started playing baseball near my home in Albion, Me. I performed in the infield for several semi-professional clubs and finally landed a job with one of the Maine professional clubs.

I had considerable success at the bat, and some of the young pitchers of the league used to flatter me by giving me a base on balls when I came to the bat at a crucial point in a game.

I joined the Lynn club of the New England League last year and had the best year since I started to play baseball. I was placed at first base. I had never been guarded the initial station, but after a few weeks I got accustomed to the position and

There ought to be plenty of excitement and fine hockey on tap for the followers of the Canadian sport at the Boston Arena tonight when the Irish-American A. A. and the Pilgrim A. A. meet for the fifth game of their seven game series.

Manager Lougee of the Arena cancelled the scheduled game with the Victorias of Montreal so as to get the two local sevens together tonight

With the scores even in games won and lost, each with five Pilgrims leading in total goals scored 21 to 17, the Irish-Americans and the Pilgrims are likely to go at it hammer and tongs tonight

Irving Small, Roy Skilton and George Bray has been the mainstays of the I. A. A. A. in this series and this fine trio of hockey players are showing improvement with every game. The work of Irving Small has featured all of the games and the Pilgrims consider him the most dangerous man on the I. A. A. A. team.

The Pilgrim A. A. seven on account of their speed, are not wanting for backers. In Patsy Sequin, Mickie Roach, Spider Fynan and Ralph Whitten the Pilgrims can hold up their end of speed with any team, while Doc Candet and Norman Small have been playing very effectively on the defense.

By Olivette

NUMBER ONE is a sweet, simple and girlish little hat which sacrifices no whit of its smartness and chic to its dainty prettiness.

The brim is of black Milan, and the crown is of tan satin veiled in tulle. Black moire pump bows surround the crown, and nestling high above them is a wreath of pink roses with glowing red centres.

With this is worn a simple frock of printed pussy-willow cloth, collared and cuffed in rose satin.

MODEL NO. 2

This little frock of orchid-colored taffeta is oddly trimmed. A design of peaches in conventional form is cut from velvet of a deeper tone and corded on to chiffon of pale mauve. This appliqued chiffon forms the upper part of the kimono bodice and the tunic of the skirt. The long sleeves are of the taffeta, as are the rolling revers set under a

The tunic is piped in taffeta and is laced by a heavy cord of deep purple, which falls to the bottom of the draped skirt. This girl, who is a cross between a pansy and an orchid, wears a hat of mauve straw trimmed in velvet of deep purple. This is set in a bow beneath the brim and falls over the shoulders.

MODEL NO. 3

The hat whose brim is a mass of nodding ostrich tips is a new note in millinery.

With it we show you a smart Summer trotteur costume of goline in a shade of sulphur yellow. The stripes on the skirt run up and down and the tunic is so arranged that the striping is horizontal. Forother trimming over and beyond the arrangement of the material this charming little frock has a sash of black taffeta and a Gladstone collar of soft, sheer, white organdie.

MODEL NO. 4

The Watteau shepherdess never wore her tilted chapeau with more grace than the girl today manages this little plateau hat tilted over her saucy nose. We show you a model of dull green straw tilted high at the back by a mass of black velvet ribbon and trimmed bi-symmetrically with bunches of pale pink daisies.

The gown with which it is worn is a quaint adaptation of our darling styles. It is a white pussy-willow cloth, with long, severe sleeves of black charmeuse. The simple V-cut neck is filled with softening tulle. Blouse and tunic are fulled gracefully, and the only ornamentation is offered by the knee sash of black and by the striking note of the black wooden beads.

MODEL NO. 5

Wonderfully well tailored is this suit of blue cabardine. Over the simple, mannish coat are arranged revers of Roman striped silk in tones of blue, sulphur and vanilla brown. These button into a little waistcoat from which are pendant two tasselled ends of the silk. The buttons used are of clouded amber.

The skirt is cut circular and is drawn up into the popular bustle line. The long cuffs are of white pique.

MODEL NO. 6

This little sport coat of Scotch homespun illustrates the importance of the hip flare in every garment Milady wears. It is a very practical coat for Spring tramps or Summer sports. It is cut on kimono lines and flares almost to the width of a cape. With a rolled shirt of black, a roll-rimmed sailor and severely cut linen collar it makes a very becoming costume for the woman who has a reactionary attitude against the over-elaborate clothes of today.

How Dancing Will Make You Symmetrical

Easy Exercises for the Home Fully Described.

By MARGARET MORRIS

(Of "The Queen of the Movies Co.")

IT would never do to decide upon dancing as a remedy for this thing or that thing, if we were to look upon dancing as a hodge-podge of hap-hazard steps.

Dancing as a whole if no special thing is to be considered is beneficial as a whole, but it is more fascinating to seek and find some special phase of a dance, which can in turn be pounced upon as just the thing for benefiting some special defect in a person which needs correcting.

One can be a specialist in dancing just as a physician may specialize in different branches, it really amounts to the same thing.

That part of the body that needs the application of systematic thought in order to derive any benefit from dancing is the part from the hips to the shoulders.

Girls are so apt to gain through that part of the body when they put on weight, and it is so easy to keep perfectly limber and flexible with a little care.

The best exercise in the world for keeping the weight from the hips is the banding of the knee as far as possible up toward the waist, first the right and then the left, keeping the body perfectly rigid in the meantime. Keep up this movement for ten or twelve times and if you can combine it in a dance step all the better. The more muscles kept in use at the same time, the more flexible is the body.

High kicking is the best thing in the world for keeping the waist slight and trim. Try a skipping movement to get the idea, and skip around the room about ten times, making the step higher each time. Of course, this dancing movement must be systematically kept up if results are looked for.

Kicking with the arm movement is more difficult but even more beneficial, because more muscles are brought into play.

Any movement with the arms has direct effect upon the shoulders, rounding them out and making them firm.

But perhaps the best thing about this combination of the arm and leg movement is the fact that the more frequently it is practiced the more perfect is the distribution of weight over the whole body and therefore the certainty of always maintaining the correct equilibrium is assured.

This is of great importance to the dancer; it is one of the first steps to success on the long road, but I think it should be of benefit to almost every healthy, wide-awake girl of today.

There are so many times when we need poise, mainly because it is the thing for the American girl to indulge in all kinds of active sports.

In my next article I will try to show the difference between the benefit derived from the ordinary ballroom dances and the more active dance movements which in their fundamental steps I have outlined briefly in this article.

And then it will be easier to understand what I mean by symmetry of mind and body. The cause of the thing that is to be corrected must be ascertained before the remedy can be decided upon, and the effect of the treatment can only be determined after systematic dance exercise.

For hip reduction. For the waist. The combination exercise.

"There!" she said. "It's all up with madame now. You've got the game in your own hands, my lady, and can send them all packing."

The letter was addressed to my husband in London. Pride had seized the arm of Alma's maid in the act of posting it, and under threat of the law (not to speak of instant personal chastisement) the girl had confessed that both this letter and others had been written by our housekeeper under the inspiration of her mistress.

BROKE THE SEAL

Without any compunction Price broke the seal of the intercepted letter and read it aloud to me. It was a shocking thing, accusing me with Martin, and taunting my husband with the falseness of the forthcoming entertainment.

Feeling too degraded to speak, I took the letter in silence out of my maid's hands, and while I was in the act of locking it away in a drawer, Alma came up with a telegram from my husband, saying he was leaving London by the early train the following morning and would arrive at Blackwater at half-past three in the afternoon.

"Dear old Jimmy!" she said. "What a surprise you have in store for him! But of course you've told him already, haven't you? . . . No? Ah, I see you've been saving it all up to tell him face to face. Oh, happy, happy you!"

It was too late to leave now. The hour of my trial had come. There was no possibility of escape. It was just as if Satan had been holding me in the net of my sin, so that I could not fly away.

At three o'clock the next day (which was the day before the day fixed for the reception) I heard the motor-car going off to meet my husband at Blackwater. At four o'clock I heard it return. A few minutes afterwards I heard my husband's voice in the hall. I thought he would come up to me directly, but he did not do so, and I did not attempt to go down. When, after a while, I asked what had become of him, I was told that he was in the library with Alma, and that they were alone.

Two hours passed.

To justify and fortify myself I thought how badly my husband had behaved to me. I remembered that he had married me from the most mercenary motives: that he had paid off his mistress with the money that came through me: that he had killed by cruelty the efforts I had made to love him: that he had humiliated me by gross infidelities committed on our honeymoon. I recalled the scenes in Rome, the scenes in Paris, and the insults I had received under my own roof.

It was all in vain. Whether God means it that the woman's fault in breaking her marriage vows (whatever her sufferings and excuse) shall be greater than that of the man I do not know. I only know that I was trembling like a prisoner before her judge when, being dressed for dinner and waiting for the sound of the bell, I heard my husband's footsteps approach my door.

I was standing by the fire at that moment, and I held on to the mantelpiece as my husband came into the room.

Seventy-Sixth Chapter.

He was very pale. The look of hardness, almost of brutality, which pierced his manner at normal moments had deepened, and I could see at a glance that he was nervous. His monocle dropped of itself from his slow gray eyes, and the white fat fingers which replaced it trembled.

Without making hands or offering any other sort of salutation he plunged immediately into the matter that was uppermost in his mind.

"I am still at a loss to account for this affair of your father's," he said. "of course I know what it is supposed to mean—a reception in honor of our home-coming. That explanation may or may not be sufficient for these stupid islanders, but it's rather too thin for me. Can you tell me what your father means by it?"

The Thrilling Story of a Girl Who Won Her Fight for Love Against Tremendous Odds

Based on Jerome Lee's version of the same name and results in New York Court in 1911, by E. W. Peaslee and sends Lee and Neil Lee to the Ludlow Street Jail. Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

By WEBSTER DENISON

SCOTT twirled the end of his debonair mustache and adjusted his eyeglass to inspect the book-like menu. He handed another to Gertrude. Its amplitude disconcerted her. She turned to one of the half dozen pages and confronted line after line of inexplicable concoctions that she had never dreamed of. She couldn't have told whether they were things to eat or advertisements of a modiste's sartorial equipment. Here and there was a word that seemed to suggest food, but it was complemented before and after with intimidating phrases she could neither understand nor pronounce. Consomme a la Borgeade. Who ever heard of that? And the meats; they were all braised, a la mode or a la Kahn.

The white aproned figure at her side insisted on thickening. It took cognizance of her distress and made mental suggestion. "Have ham and eggs," it counseled. "You'll find them on page five." But the thin lips emitted no sound; the immobile features remained immobile until Scott broke the silence. For the benefit of the sphinx he was grandiose and deferent. The girl across from him might have been a duchess in disguise.

"Now, let's see, Miss Meyer, suppose we start with a little cocktail."

She looked up in evident alarm.

"I'd rather not, Mr. Scott," she said timorously. "I never drink."

The silent service communed again within himself.

"Oh, but you will; if you come to Kahn's with him you will. They all say they don't drink at first. But they will come around to it. Might as well have a bit now; take a clover leaf; it's mild."

HE TAKES ONE

But Gertrude, oblivious to this cynical suggestion, continued to gaze across at Scott.

"I wouldn't dare for the world," he confessed. "But you won't mind if I take something?"

No, she wouldn't mind. "Isn't it kind of her not to object," thought the image in black and white. "So considerate, and she looks as if she could bend him around her little finger."

But now the image ceases his cogitations and becomes the alert and ready servant. Of Scott sudresses him.

"Let me have a dry martini."

"One, sir?"

"Yes, one."

"Waiters are so horribly stupid!" thought the millionaire. "Didn't he hear her say she didn't drink?" And aloud:

"And you may bring us some of the caviar canape and a little relish—olives and celery; then some blue points. That will do for the present; I'll give you the rest later."

The string orchestra struck up the serenade from "The Jewels." The sphinx-like waiter returned with the cocktail, and the millionaire smacked his lips.

"This is what I call comfort," he said, beaming upon his young guest. "A quiet nook like this and congenial companionship. Where's the wrong? Some people would have you believe a man's a first-class scoundrel if he invites a girl employe out to luncheon, and just because she is his employe. If it was some other employe or some other employer, why, fine and dandy. Don't you see, my dear? Don't you see that it's perfectly harmless? Come, now; don't you?"

Gertrude thought it very harmless. At least, she said so. In reality she felt ill at ease. To begin with, she was out of place, and then the words of Catherine Wignall warning kept surging through her brain.

Scott ordered another cocktail.

"Sure you won't have one?" he asked. "Quite customary now. Most every one takes them with their meals."

But she demurred.

"I'm sure I couldn't drink it," she told him, "even if I thought it was right."

A NICE LUNCHEON

He didn't urge her. He felt quite at peace with himself and with her. After the second cocktail and the relish Scott ordered a substantial luncheon. The tender squab chicken, creamed potatoes, asparagus tips, the tasty salad of nuts, California grapes and what not were a revelation to Gertrude.

Whatever reluctances she had felt about coming she experienced no such quality about partaking of the food. It was all delicious. Scott was stimulating enough and extremely convivial. The spirit of the place asserted itself. The girl began to doubt whether her employer had committed such a heinous offense after all.

A Modern Tortoise.

Miller purchased the horse one Monday afternoon. On the following morning he set out in a state of great indignation to the house of the vendor, a thrifty Scot.

"And to think that you told me the horse had won half a dozen matches against some of the best horses in the country! Oh, shame on you—shame!" The farmer's voice trailed off into something like a sob as he concluded his angry diatribe. But Sandy remained unperturbed.

"And so he did, mon," was his quiet rejoinder.

"But he can't even trot a mile in eight minutes," spluttered the outraged Gilles.

"And who said he could?" asked Sandy. "It was in ploughing matches that he took six prizes!"

FELICE LYNE MAKES DEBUT IN BOSTON OPERA

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

Felice Lyne, the little American girl who conquered London with Hammerstein's opera two years ago, made her first appearance in grand opera in America last night at the Opera, and won a triumph almost equal to her London successes.

If her success was due more to her extraordinary personality, her vocal skill and the experience she has gathered during her past two years than to the intrinsic worth of her top notes, it was a well-deserved success just the same, and was received in very much of the same lighthearted, the lovely little Russian she sang here for two seasons. In fact, figure and voice Alphovsky also made up for lack of brilliancy in the high attitudes by her attractive personality.

Miss Lyne sang Gilda in the Rigoletto of Amato and the Duke of Lafitte. It was a very fine performance in every respect.

Miss Lyne is very small, and pretty as a doll. She is a mistress of stage deportment, knows the worth of every gesture and sings with a judgment and assurance that is worthy much. Her middle voice is very lovely, and in purely lyric roles she should be eminently satisfactory. And, if we speak discretely of her high notes, it is because we believe that the fortune this Winter to hear the finest coloratura voices in the world.

Lafitte was surprisingly good as the Duke. His voice has always been admired and he sang last night with more skill, better taste and keener intelligence than I have found in him before.

Amato's Rigoletto is a master's accomplishment. With his glorious baritone voice, his superb presence and his histrionic skill he made his impersonation memorable.

MANY SALES AT AUTO TRUCK SHOW

By J. C. KERRISON.

This, the last day of the motor truck show, finds the attendance greatly increased over that of previous days. The interest that has been created surpasses the expectations of the most sanguine of the exhibitors. This, however, is not surprising when one remembers that many industrial interests are to be found in New England and the fact that motor trucks can be utilized to good advantage in almost every industry.

The manufacturers as well as the merchants of New England have found in the show something worthy of their consideration. While the sales have not reached the high-water mark established during the pleasure car show, the transactions have been satisfactory to the great bulk of the exhibitors.

The dealers and their representatives have been decidedly helpful to the visitors of the show in their recommendations and suggestions relating to the introduction of motor trucks or the further improving of their present delivery systems. There is no line of business in which the question of efficiency is not considered and effectively by the up-to-date business man in this age of economy. They are doing more in the line of efficiency applied to bring about increased delivery than to give time and to do so without any increase in the cost of delivering a certain amount of goods by a motor vehicle than is necessary to horse-drawn vehicles. The saving of time is emphasized and it is that saving of time which gives the customer better service.

• • •

It is refreshing to observe at this show the growing spirit among truck makers to tell the truth about the limitations of trucks. Every truck is subject to limitations, as is all machinery. It cannot be passed without damage, nor can it be operated without the ordinary amount of care and attention that the motor salesmen are impressing upon the prospective owners.

They do not hesitate to tell the truth about their trucks, to emphasize the danger of overloading, the dangers of neglect and abuse and in doing this call attention to the fact that to overload a horse-drawn vehicle is to destroy its temporary value. To neglect horses in a vital injury or sell them to good to regard to horses and horse-drawn vehicles is equally true as regards trucks.

The motor trucks of today and those displayed at the show are designed and built by men who know, while perhaps, in one or two instances, slight improvements can be made, no former teamster nor any truck driver can intelligently reconstruct a truck after it has been delivered to the purchaser.

The business men who three years ago would not look upon a truck are today adopting it to the advancement of their business and delivery systems. The recent heavy snow storms in this section have demonstrated that motor vehicles are a decidedly valuable adjunct to any business. With the experience of that period in mind the merchants, manufacturers and others are thoroughly convinced.

• • •

Among the exhibits at the show worthy of more than passing attention is that made by the Buick Motor Company of its light delivery wagon. This exhibit is one of the most extensive of light trucks in the show and the product is a model that in keeping with the high-grade product of the pleasure car branch of this firm. During the four days of the show the local company has received many orders for trucks of this type, as well as the light wagon constructed particularly for the use of fire chiefs. The adoption of the Buick as the standard chief's wagon of the Boston fire department has been the means of bringing to this exhibit the bulk of the fire chiefs of New England.

At the international Harvester booth, General Manager S. D. Truber and his right hand man, Fred Cooley, had the pleasure of entertaining a number of the International Harvester officials, including Sales Manager L. E. Veirs, W. R. Peterson, R. A. Hopkins, consulting engineer; W. A. Bryant, superintendent of works at Akron; General Agent O. H. Brown-ing of Philadelphia, and O. J. McIntosh, assistant general agent at Albany. Mr. Veirs complimented the local company upon the admirable show that it was making and particularly upon the amount of business it had transacted during the period of the show.

Could the Government Own and Manage the Railroads?

Yes, and the Government WILL Own and Manage the Railroads When the Time Comes, Paying the Owners Fairly

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company.

Those who oppose government ownership used to say with a satisfied smile: "The government is not able to manage important undertakings. GREAT undertakings require the great American business man. He does not condescend to go into government employment. Inferior government employes can not manage big things."

They do not say that quite as cheerfully as they used to, now that the parcel post has made thirty millions of profits in the first year AND COMPELLED THE LARGE INTELLECTUAL AMERICAN BUSINESS MEN TO REDUCE THEIR EXPRESS RATES BY ALMOST FIFTY PER CENT.

The postoffice that carries a letter to Hawaii or London or on dog sled to the outposts in Alaska for two cents can scarcely be declared incapable.

Now that it does with parcels what it had done with letters, giving better service, quicker service, infinitely cheaper service, the placid critics of government ability are troubled.

They are troubled particularly about the railroads. But they still persist that the railroad system is too complicated, too difficult, for management by the government.

The fight against government ownership of railroads is carried on, first, by those who don't know what they are discussing.

Second, by the owners of railroads who have made money out of dividends, money out of wrecking roads, money out of rebates for special customers, money out of everything except GIVING THE BEST POSSIBLE SERVICE TO THE PUBLIC.

And opponents of government railroad ownership also unfortunately are the railroad employes.

They imagine in some vague way that they would be injured by government ownership, whereas in reality they would be better paid, they would have better hours, they would be secure in their employment under civil service.

On the New York Central "Twentieth Century" express—an admirably managed train, which would be duplicated a hundred times over under government ownership, by the way—there traveled the other day a man who does millions of business a year with the railroads. He probably does business a little more advantageously than his small competitors. And he asked this question:

"If you favor government ownership, mention ONE single thing in which the government could manage this road better than it is managed."

This was the answer he got, made on behalf of the readers of this newspaper:

"The New York Central Railroad and the other railroads complained bitterly about the recent increase in wages on the railroads of the East.

"The increase amounted to six millions a year for ALL of the Eastern railroads, the New York Central and the others. And the managers of all the railroads complained that that was a horrible tax—SIX MILLIONS in a year.

"They could not bear it, and the people must not expect good service with low freight and passenger rates if they added six millions at a time to the cost of wages on the railroads of the East.

"You railroad men and owners make a great fuss about an increase of six millions a year for LABOR—for money spent for the good of the nation on tens of thousands of families of working men.

"But the New York Central system alone carries a debt of at least three hundred millions, upon which it must pay, with the various note-shaving, money-lending schemes of Wall Street, at least six per cent. a year.

"Therefore, this one single railroad—the New York Central—pays eighteen millions a year on a debt of three hundred millions.

"The government of the United States, issuing government-owned railroad bonds GUARANTEED BY THE GOVERNMENT, could borrow the three hundred millions FOR THREE PER CENT.

"Therefore, if the government of the United States owned this New York Central Railroad, that railroad's three hundred millions of debts, handled with so much difficulty at six per cent. interest, would be carried by the government for three per cent. interest.

"AND ON THAT ONE ITEM THE GOVERNMENT WOULD SAVE NINE MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR—BY PAYING THREE PER CENT. FOR THE MONEY INSTEAD OF SIX.

You ask what the government could do in the management of railroads better than private individuals do it—there is your answer.

The government could save nine million dollars a year on the interest charges of one single railroad. And that would pay ALL THE SIX MILLIONS INCREASE OF WAGES AND LEAVE THREE MILLIONS OVER.

And what the government could do with the New York Central it could do with the other railroads. It could take them out of the hands of the money-lenders, the sharks, the note-shavers, THE SO-CALLED HIGHLY RESPECTABLE BANKERS that rob every railroad all the year round through usury, and that occasionally treat the New Haven as the Pierpont Morgan firm did, ruining the stockholders and wrecking the road.

The man who asks how the government of the United States could possibly manage the railroads better than they are managed now between speculating presidents and thievish bankers might just as well ask how the government of the United States could manage some other business better than a gang of burglars could manage it.

The government in time WILL manage the railroads and own them. For they are the real ROADS of the country. Nations have always owned their own roads.

Occasionally highwaymen, called barons or lords of the manor, have stood here and there taking toll from the merchant. And today on our big national roads similar highwaymen, railroad barons and financial sharks, stand taking toll. But that isn't going to last forever.

The time will be here soon when the government will run the nation's roads, giving the best service, borrowing money with the nation's unlimited credit at a low rate of interest, giving the benefit of the low rate of interest first to the public who travel, then to the merchants who ship their goods, then to the workingmen employed.

If private individuals owned the postoffice, it would cost twenty-five cents to send a letter to Chicago, and five dollars to send one to Alaska.

What the government has done for letters and for parcels it will do for the carrying of passengers and freight.

Let the railroad men remember that.

HOW BILL GOT ALONG---No. 10

Bill found a letter from Emily waiting for him as he came downstairs one morning, telling of her arrival in Boston with her mother, also giving an address that was in a swell neighborhood. She asked Bill to come and see her just as quick as he could. Bill told his friend Jim of Emily's arrival and asked Jim what he could do.

"Gee whiz! Jim, I haven't any clothes to go butting up there around those brownstone fronts; if they got a slant at me up in that neighborhood they'd pinch me for a burglar. Besides, I haven't any money to entertain 'em. It costs like the dickens to go anywhere in this town, and just now I haven't any spare kale to do anything with. Guess I'd better lay low 'til after they have gone—but, gosh! I sure would like to see Emily."

"Aw, you make me tired, Bill," said Jim. "Why don't you go get some new scenery and put up a front. There's a lot of guys in this town wearing fur lined overcoats with no undershirts, and patent leather shoes with no socks, yet they get by—or seem to—easier'n the ones who don't. You don't have to pay for glad rags when you get 'em. I know half a dozen places where you can get fitted out, and all you pay is so much a week from your salary—why, it's a cinch, I tell you."

"It may be a cinch and all that, Jim, but I've never been in debt yet, and I'm not going to begin now. If I can't afford to pay for what I want I'll do without till I can."

Things went along this way for a couple of days and Bill did not go to see Emily—until, coming home one evening after work, the landlady told him a young lady and her mother had been there to see him that afternoon and were coming back that evening. When Bill heard this he was for going right out again and not coming back until late. As he started out the front door he met Emily and her mother coming in.

Buffalo Jones, the Famous Old Ranchman, Tells How He Will Lasso a Wild Gorilla and Bring Him Out of His Jungle Alive and Happy—Which Is Something of a Task

Buffalo Jones, the famous old ranchman, is about to begin the most thrilling and perilous hunt ever undertaken. He proposes to lasso a wild gorilla and bring him out of the jungle alive and happy. He will take with him two intrepid Western girls to keep his fierce prisoner from dying of grief.

His story and the story of the young women fills two pages of tomorrow's Boston Sunday AMERICAN.

Also in the incomparable magazine section will be these great exclusive features:

Inside Story of James K. Hackett's Million Dollar Heritage.
How feud made the matinee idol a millionaire overnight just like the hero of his most impossible melodrama.

New Sketches by Helleu.
A charming color page by the greatest of French etchers.

How to Shoot, by the Champion Pistol Shot of the World.
Alfred P. Lane, who has been appointed to teach the New York police how to hit what they fire at, tells you how anyone can become a good shot.

Why Jealousy Drives a Man Mad.
Dr. William Lee Howard, the distinguished physician, explains how fear of being robbed of one's dearest possession sends an impulse to the brain which overpowers everything.

Science at Last Explains the Tango.
A repetition, perhaps, of the old dance madness of the middle ages.

Keeping House Without a Servant.
Another of those fascinatingly helpful household articles by Mrs. Josephine Story.

Questions Answered

INVENTOR OF THE AEROPLANE

W. M.—It would be next to impossible to say who invented the aeroplane. Positions of paramount importance in the art of flying belong to Professor Samuel P. Langley, M. Ader and Sir Hiram Maxim. They were certainly among the first to boost the art. The first to make a heavier-than-air machine that actually flew with a man were the brothers, Orville and Wilbur Wright, of Dayton, Ohio. Until the latter part of 1905, the Wright Brothers were the only men who could fly. From 1903 to 1905 the Wrights made 150 flights, averaging a mile each; one flight, that of October 5, 1905, being twenty-four miles in length and lasting thirty-eight minutes.

Testing Radium-Bearing Ore

By GARRET T P. SERVISS

A N Arizona man writes that he has found some rock which puzzles everybody around there (where rocks are commonly regarded with an interrogating eye that would surprise a New Hampshire farmer), and he wants to know how he can test the correctness of his suspicion that it contains radium.

There is no better way than to call in the aid of a photographer, unless you happen yourself to be an amateur in photography, in which case you have the whole secret in your own hands and need no confident. Here is the process that the United States Bureau of Mines advises:

Take a photographic plate and wrap it in two thicknesses of black paper. This, of course, is to be done in a dark-room. On top of the wrapped-up plate lay a key, or a coin, or any metallic object possessing a characteristic outline—the key is usually employed. Then suspend directly over the key a specimen of the suspected rock, or ore, weighing at least two or three ounces. Do not let it press upon the key or the plate.

Finally put the entire apparatus inside a light-tight box. Of course the whole proceeding must take place in the dark-room, with no more illumination than that furnished by a photographer's red light, and as little as possible of that. Leave the box untouched for three or four days; then unwrap the plate and develop it in the ordinary way. If your rock contains any appreciable amount of radium you will find on the plate an outline picture, or profile, of the key, or whatever metallic object you may have used. It will be more or less sharply impressed according to the quantity of radium.

If no metallic object were used the effect of suspending the ore above the plate, or letting it lie upon it, would be to produce a general darkening of the plate when it was developed. Such a darkening might be produced by an accidental exposure to light. The reason for using the key is that the rays from the radium are mostly intercepted by the metal, so that underneath it the plate is unaffected, and when developed shows the form of the key printed light upon a dark background. If you get such a picture after performing the experiment just described with proper precaution, you may be sure that there is radium in your ore.

But to extract the radium—that is quite another question! Until recently all the radium ore found in the United States has been sent to Europe to be treated. Now a method of extraction has been invented here, and we may henceforth extract our radium at home. At best the processes are long, complicated, tedious and costly.

If you should discover an ore containing less than one ten-millionth per cent. of gold you would hardly expect to make a fortune out of it! You would let it alone, and look for something more profitable. But that is about the percentage of radium found in pitchblende, one of the most productive radium ores known. A ton of pitchblende contains about one milligram (say, one thirty-thousandth of an ounce) of radium. It has been estimated by sober reasoners that the total quantity of radium in all the known radium ore deposits in this country does not exceed six ounces! On the other hand, certain enthusiastic calculators have asserted that Colorado alone contains far more than that. But what do you think that their top estimate for the Colorado total is? TEN OUNCES!

You would have to tear down, grind up, dissolve, precipitate, chystallize, recrystallize, "fractionate" and refractionate a mountain as big as Pike's Peak, composed all of radium-bearing rock, in order to get enough of the precious mystery to fill your hat!

In-Shoots

The triumphs of right are often so modest that we cannot realize them.

No one in the factory but the boss should keep his eye continually on the clock.

The painted woman does not look quite as fierce as the painted Indian, but it is well to give her a wide berth.

The People or the Railroads?

Reprinted from Hearst's Magazine.

BY ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

You must own the railroads or the railroads will own you. The alternative is not a happy one, and many will not like it. But what is a trapped humanity to do? The situation has been forced by the hog rapacity of the railroads themselves. Even now they go demanding higher freight rates, higher passenger rates. They are telling the powers that be—White House, Congress, Interstate Commerce Commission, Governors, State Legislatures—that unless they are permitted to advance their charges it will soon become a case in their sinking destinies of bankruptcies and receivers.

What the railroads say of their retrograding fortunes is not entirely without trace of truth. To the extent that it is true, however, is but the merest measure of what inside larcenies and embezzlements have been committed against the railroads by railroad management. Were the railroads honestly capitalized, and each stock share represented an actual right investment, they would be paying not five, not six, not ten, but twenty-five per cent.

The trouble is an aqueous one. Crime stepped in—the railroad crime of water. An expert, speaking without prejudice, informs mankind that for every mile of its track the stock of the New York Central has been watered to the rippling tune of $50,000. This, by the Vanderbilts. Its unclean neighbor, the New Haven, through a Morgan-Rockefeller manipulation, is carrying a watery load of $100,000,000. Also, you have, in that criminal element of water, but to change the figures to give the stock and bond story of every railroad in the country.

Have Gone Into Roads Not as a Business, but as a Crime

Men on the bridge of management have gone into railroads not as a business, but as a crime. The cry has been "Water! and more water!" What satirist said that a "railroad company is a body of stock, entirely surrounded by water"? And the Morgans and the Rockefellers, the Goulds and the Vanderbilts, the Baers and the Cassatts, having watered the railroads, must—in the name of market appearances—force dividends to keep up stock prices and bond values.

Their doxology reads: "Bring forth the royal dividend and crown it Lord of all." Nor do they pick and choose as to methods in bringing that royal dividend forth. They dismiss men, they cut down train crews, they allow roadbeds to go to seed. And so you have derailments and smash-ups. The railroads, by light of last year's figures, are killing 712 and wounding 15,996 people a year. This bloodshed may pay dividends, and doubtless does, but it is not a railroad necessity. The American railroads, in handling three and a half million passengers, kill one. The French railroads handle over sixty million passengers before sending one to the graveyard.

Bad service, bad equipment, stock watering, make up the American reasons for all this railroad killing and wounding. Robber managements, forcing robber dividends, have so let their properties run down at the railroad bed that no less an authority than the experienced Mr. Hill declares it would call for roundly $9,000,000,000 to put the American railroads to rights. And the whole wealth of the country, may it please you, is placed by government figures no higher than $120,000,000,000!

Thievish stock watering, fraudulent bond issuing, are not the only crimes of the railroads. They corrupt Legislatures, they control Congresses, they select judges. Local or general, they everywhere poison politics. Within weeks, hasn't the New Haven bribed a Bay State Legislature to override the veto of Governor Foss? When was it that the Pennsylvania did not prove supreme at Harrisburg, the New York Central at Albany, the Reading at Trenton, the Santa Fe at Topeka, the Alton at Springfield, the Missouri Pacific at Jefferson City, the Southern at Raleigh? And if the Mobile & Ohio doesn't own Alabama, who does?

Remember Railroads Are Distributors, Not Producers

Railroads, please remember, are distributors, not producers.

The railroads, being the distributors, you would fancy, and fancy rightly, that a railroad stock and bond increase would keep abreast of and not advance in volume beyond the increase in things to be distributed. Of things distributable, wheat is an example. Compare the railroad story with the wheat story, and observe how crooked railroads outstrip the honest, unwaterable wheat. Consider the decade just passed. The account of wheat production runs after this manner:

Year.	Bushels.
1903	670,000,000
1904	638,000,000
1905	552,000,000
1906	693,000,000
1907	735,000,000
1908	634,000,000
1909	665,000,000
1910	635,000,000
1911	621,000,000
1912	730,000,000

You will not find in those wheat figures at least any argument which calls for a railroad increase. And yet during those same ten years, the following, under Morganization, were—bonds and stocks—the railroads' watery annals:

Year.	Amount. (New issues).
1903	$465,000,000
1904	613,000,000
1905	592,000,000
1906	765,000,000
1907	1,512,000,000
1908	685,000,000
1909	720,000,000
1910	930,000,000
1911	702,000,000
1912	325,000,000

True, while wheat stood still in the matter of production, manufactured goods went gallantly forward. But no production, anywhere or in any field of human effort, began to keep up with the railroad—water—production of new stocks and bonds. You note, doubtless, that, while 1907, the panic year, was the great water year of railroads, with the gauge showing new stock and bond issues aggregating $1,512,000,000 last year was the small year, with no more than $325,000,000. The reason? People are waking up to the railroads, and what criminal managements have water-logged them.

The late Mr. Lamont, speaking through the late Mr. Cleveland, remarked: "It is a condition, not a theory, which confronts us." The railroads have so ordered matters that they will own the people unless the people own them. The public must take over the railroads.

Wise Ones Have Seen the Necessity of Public Ownership

The wise ones for twenty years have foreseen this final necessity of Public Ownership of railroads in its coming. While chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the late Colonel William R. Morrison—he who in a former tariff day, as chief of Ways and Means, had been celebrated as "Horizontal Bill"—stood gazing at a map of these United States. Turning to a newspaper man at his elbow, he called attention to the network of black tracery which marked the railroads in their localities and their lines. This was the conversation:

Colonel Morrison—What's to be the end? The people must take the railroads to save themselves from being taken by the railroads. The country is already—like some great fish—caught in a seine, an iron seine of railroads.

Newspaper man—Congress, the Legislatures, the courts, can always break the seine and release the fish.

Colonel Morrison—They could; but will they? Not as matters stand; not with things as they are. The railroads today have two-fifths of the Interstate Commerce Commission. When I go, they'll have three-fifths. Who do you suppose suggested Snowsaller, whom the other day Mr. Cleveland named for the Federal Bench in Chicago? The railroads. Neither your children, nor your children's children will live long enough to see the day when the railroads don't pick out your judges. As for congresses and legislatures, they crouch at the railroad feet.

Newspaper man—You are a pessimist, Colonel.

Colonel Morrison—Not at all; not even a prophet. The railroads have tied a Gordian knot. But the people will one day cut it—cut it with the sword of Public Ownership!

Public ownership!

Instantly the dismal cry of "Socialism!" is heard in protest.

That cry of "Socialism!" is false. The railroad is the modern highway. A public which owns a street may own a railroad. They yelled "Socialism!" at the parcels post, in an effort to perpetuate a vampire quartet of express companies in their blood-suckings. Certainly, own the telegraphs, too! The right which carries a letter will carry a message or a package. Also the right which carries a package will carry a man.
